Jan. 5 hearing for complaints against tribal officials

BY TOM CRASH
Time's Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Last Friday in Pine Ridge, the tribal council scheduled a hearing for complaints against elected tribal officials for Thursday, January 5 at the Billy Mills Hall.

Will Peters, council representative from Pine Ridge and Garfield Steele, councilman from Wounded Knee District, pushed forward a complaint against Walt Big Crow, Wakpamni District representative.

Citing disloyalty and dishonesty, malfeasance and misconduct, Peters referred to the issue of C&W Construction, an attempt to circumvent formal arbitration to decide just compensation for work completed by C&W Construction, a road construction company out of Sioux Falls.

According to Lyle Jack, chairman of economic and business development committee, the committee had voted to send the dispute to formal arbitration, Big Crow is accused of pursuing informal arbitration in attempt to pay off the contractor.

C&W construction has been accused of not paying TERO fees, failing to pay local contractors and completing work that failed the review of BIA inspectors.

In addition to complaints to be filed against Big Crow, there is a possibility of complaints being filed against Juanita Sherich, of Medicine Root District, and Rhonda Two Eagle, secretary of the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

The meeting is scheduled to get underway at 10 a.m. Thursday, Jan. 6 at Billy Mills Hall.

RST council urged to adopt meth laws

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

ROSEBUD - In a special session on Thursday, Dec. 29, the Rosebud Tribal Council listened to a three hour presentation by Tammy Scott, meth prevention coordinator for the MAPP-SD Mission Office. MAPP-SD is a project of Prairie View Prevention Services, Inc., a private owned business. MAPP-SD established a coalition presently consisting of 15 members representing 10 different local agencies.

MAPP-SD is funded by direct set aside funding from the U.S. Congress. Scott, a member of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, is the only MAPP-SD Coordinator located on a reservation and the demand is very high for presentations on methamphetamine, which are free.

Scott said that she had been trying to address the RST tribal council since the summer of 2003 and felt that it was very important to her work. It is also important to have the support of the "powers that be" to build a solid foundation so that people in our communities will understand what they are buying into.

According to the MAPPS "Signs and Symptoms: Meth is a synethetic manmade form of methamphetamine. Its effects can last anywhere from 8-72 hours. One is addicted after first use. Clinical studies have proven that meth caused permanent brain damage and permanent memory loss."

Scott spoke of the creation of a Drug Endangered Children Team comprised of the fire department, law enforcement services, emer-

New Years St. Francis powwow attracts a large three day crowd

ST. FRANCIS - The relatively mild winter weather in south central South Dakota and the Rosebud reservation was responsible, in part, for a packed house at the old Veterans gym at St. Francis. The 2006 New Years Powwow attracted visitors from North Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa and other states, as well as up to nineteen singing groups in the three days from December 30-January.

Sam Wounded Head did the Lakota invocation and the Red Leaf Singers sang the Lakota flag and Veterans songs. Tyrone Big Crow served as the president for the 2005 New Year's powwow committee, and Mary Bad Hand was the vice president. The treasurer was Tre Larvie and Kaylene Makes Room was the secretary.

The emcees were Albert White Hat, Sr. of St. Francis and Garrin Coons of Winnebago, NE. Marty Makes Room was the arena director.

The masquerade and unmasking of participants during the stroke of midnight on December 31 was a large part of the draw and anticipation of this year's powwow. Pat Bad Hand of Two Strike said that from a traditional perspective those who participate in the masquerade are prepared to talk to the people and provide them with a relevant message when unmasked. This year Robert Fisher was dressed as a cowboy and apparently was dancing with a lot of finesse and energy. His message to the people was directed at those afflicted with diabetes, high blood pressure and other ailments. He said he was dancing in the masquerade so that the people would have good health and healing in the New Year.

Some of the singing groups in attendance included, Red Leaf, Kiukanpi, Thunder River, Eagle Creek, Lakota Tribe, Little Wind, Thunder Ridge, Buffalo Medicine, NDN Express, Eagle Voice, High Spirit, White River Crossing, and Young Nation.

Pat Bad Hand said that he served in several capacities from hand drum judge to clean up to singing with his Red Leaf singers. He noted that with wife, Mary, on the committee he wanted to help wherever he could, including holding his son's "fancy dance" special. Bad Hand said that serving on the powwow committee obligates one for a lot of important work that committee members plan for a year advance. He said "In the gency staff, and child protection workers.

Their work is to establish a local protocol in the event a methamphetamine lab is "taken down" or one has exploded. As first responders, there are certain dangers that one might be exposed to and there should be a decontamination site for their use.

Methamphetamine is a significant problem on the Rosebud reservation, as one startling statistic revealed from a survey conducted by the Safe Trails Drug Task Force in 2003, that three out of fie of people are either selling or using the illegal drug. That statistic was questioned by one council representative who made note of its high number. Nationwide successful treatment of addicts to Methamphetamine is only at six percent; the lowest percentage for any drug.

Chief Charles Red Crow of Rosebud Law Enforcement Services explained to the council that available statistics on drug use are routinely collected from those arrested and it is difficult to collect data on the general public.

Scott noted that methamphetamine users are treated successfully in small numbers and it is becoming a public health problem. The materials that are used to illegally "cook" methamphetamine in a lab are routinely discarded in ditches, motel rooms, and vacant buildings. People who engage in the production of such illegal drugs do not always have to have their lab hooked up to electricity, so it can be very deceptive as vehicles, rental type trailers, and vacant buildings are often used.

Methamphetamine contains an assortment of ingredients that are combined with the active ingredients in Sudafed.

Once "cooked" at home the residue is absorbed into any porous surface in the home; carpeting, walls, countertops, furniture, and drapes. Scott says that the house can be cleaned to a certain extent but one will never fully remove all toxic residue. In order to clean a previous meth lab 100%, the home/building would most likely have to be demolished as it could represent a hazard to any future occupants.

There was also some discussion about an article which appeared in the Lakota Country Times about the "Mexican Mafia" having infiltrated the Wind River reservation. During this investigation, a Fortune 500 business plan was unveiled, which targets all of the Sioux reservations in South Dakota. She said, "They want to change addictions from alcohol to methamphetamine."

Scott further made the observation that information on methamphetamine is changing and being updated all the time; there was new information as of Dec. 5 to share. She told the council that RST needs methamphetamine specific laws. "It is important for our tribe to create and implement specific laws on methamphetamine, since the state of South Dakota is changing their laws to address illegal amphetamine use, as well as surrounding states, we are becoming a safe haven for manufacturers and dealers." They know about the legal loopholes and jurisdictional problems we face on the reservation, since the surrounding states are "tightening up" their laws; they are fleeing to our reservations to avoid punishment. The implementation and enforcement of laws is crucial to the safety and well-being of our people." Law enforcement is key in the war against this deadly drug.

Scott said, "You are charged with protecting our tribe and its members. If we don't get involved, take action yesterday, twenty years from now we may not have a tribe to protect. This drug is killing our population."

During the afternoon session of the RST tribal council, there was discussion on the motion passed last week to require the casino, law enforcement services, the court house and the tribal council to be drug tested.

There were ten council representatives who took the drug test, along with three officers and one tribal attorney. A couple of council representatives said they would want their names published as having been drug tested, and this information will be available through the tribal secretary's office. There seemed to be general agreement that test results for tribal employees would not be published as it was a confidentiality issue that had been discussed and clarified during previous administrations.

On sharing test results with the tribal membership, Antelope councilman Robert Moore said, "It should be up to the individual councilman, themselves, if they want their results published." St. Francis council representatives Mike Boltz interjected a bit of humor when he said, "I and Russell are worried about the Viagra. The public wants to know if we were drug tested."

Grass Mountain/Upper Cut Meat council representative Marion Young-One Star said that the U.S. Government only tests those who have to operate a motor vehicle. She cited the standing RST resolution that had been passed in 1996.

It had two readings and had been passed without a disciplinary portion to it. The tribe's personnel handbook is being revised and any punitive measures for not passing a drug test might be included in that version.

Fire Thunder

Thunder being escorted into Billy Mills Hall behind a banner, that read "Lakota Women for Change," and surrounded by many of her supporters. Wilmer Mesteth and the Cheyenne Creek singers sang an honoring song as Fire Thunder was escorted to her chair.

Dave Pourier, OST fifth member, opened the special session of the tribal council schedule to hear the complaints against the tribal president. Will Peters, tribal council representatvive form Pine Ridge, immediately asked for the floor and introduced a resolution to impeach and remove Walt Big Crow, council representative from Wakpamni district. The resolution was seconded by Garfield Steele, councilman from Wounded Knee district.

Citing dishonesty, disloyalty, malfeasance and misconduct, Peters demanded quick action on this complaint before the hearing on Fire Thunder's complaint could proceed.

Big Crow responded that there was a time and place for such complaints and they needed to be submitted to the secretary and then put on the agenda. He said he never ran away from any attacks or accusations and that he would stand up and respond to all of them.

After sharp discussion, the issue was resolved by Pourier deciding not to accept the motion that had nothing to do with the hearing for Fire Thunder.

Steele asked that a special session of the tribal council be scheduled to hear the complaints against Big Crow.

A tentative date was set for Thursday, Jan. 5 in Pine Ridge at Billy Mills Hall.

Pourier then turned the meeting over to special judge Leroy Greaves to conduct the hearing on the complaints to be heard against Fire Thunder.

Fire Thunder was originally suspended on Oct. 25 at a council meeting in Kyle; the original hearing was scheduled for Nov. 28, postponed to Dec. 12 and postponed again due to the death of Lamoyne Pulliam, executive director, to Dec. 30.

William Birdnecklace Tate opened the hearing with an objection against one of the tribal council representatives: citing a Robert Rules of Order, Tate expressed concerns about allowing an illegal council member to listen and to vote during the hearing. The problem with allowing an illegal member to participate and vote in the hearing is that it might lead to an appeal. Tate accused Tom Poor Bear, council representative from Eagle Nest district of being guilty of a dishonest act of being tried and convicted of a DWI in Jackson County in the summer of 2005.

The objection from Tate brought an uproar from the tribal council, some council representatives demanded that the hearing begin immediately and that this was just another stalling tactic.

Poor Bear and other council representatives stated that this had no place in the hearing for Fire Thunder as it was a separate issue.

Greaves asked the council to vote on the objection, and the council voted 17 to 0, with one not voting to deny the objection.

Tate then brought up a second objection: he stated that Walt Big Crow, because of pending charges and complaints, if allowed to continue to participate in the hearing would represent a conflict of interest and would taint any decision.

On this objection the council did not even bother to take a vote and urged the special judge to move immediately into the hearing.

Craig Dillon, Lacreek council "We have heard enough,' said Craig. "This hearing has been delayed too long and these charges are frivolous and we need to deal with this and move ahead. I make a motion right now to dismiss all of the charges brought by Bird Necklace Tate with prejudice."

The motion was seconded by Austin Watkins, council representative from Medicine Root district.

Instead of running the vote immediately, several council representatives felt strongly that many of the elders that had came to the meeting should be heard and asked the council to delay the vote until the number of people in the audience could be heard. The compromise opened the microphone, and those who spoke included, Myrna White Face Young Bear, Marie Randall, Ester White Face, Anita Ecoffey, Chauncey Loafer, Sandra Old Horse, Frank Bob Eccoffey, and Kiva Sam, a high school student from Little Wound.

At this point in the hearing, everyone who supported Fire Thunder stood up to show their support for the return of the duly elected tribal president.

"We need to stand against corruption in our tribal government and if we stand by and allow it, we are contributing to corruption." said Will Peters during his long talk. "You will never find any of the people's money in my pocket and I will continue to work hard as I can to eliminate corruption in tribal government."

"It has been 66 days and each day after the original 20 days is about hurting the people," said Fire Thunder. "I am not mad at any of you. I do not have bad feelings of any of you, we need to move ahead, we need to take care of our people. We have unsolved homicides; we have people going to bed hungry."

If I ever violated you trust or my oath of office, I would resign. But this complaint is frivolous and has no merit. We don't' have to like each other but let's work together for the people."

Everyone in the audience had a chance to speak and Greaves ran the vote; the council voted 12 in favor of dismissing all charges with prejudice, five against and one not voting.

Those voting for the dismissal of the charges included Paul Little, Maxine Lakota, Walt Big Crow, Lyle Jack, Ella John Carlow, Craig Dillon, Mary Poor Thunder, Ruth Brown, Tom Poor Bear, Austin Watkins, Phillip Good Crow, and Bernard White Face; voting against dismissal was Valeria Janis, Will Peters, Lydia Bear Killer, Kathy Janis, and Garfied Steele. Juanita Scherich did not vote.

Garfield Steele made a motion to dismiss the complaint filed by Scherich against Fire Thunder. Before the council was allowed to run the vote Fire Thunder's family, her sister Shirley Murphy conducting a making of amends ceremony.

Fire Thunder, lead by Murphy asked Scherich to come up front and offered sincere apologies from the family. Jay Taken Alive, past tribal chairman from Standing Rock said a prayer and Carol Iron Rope Herrera.

"Both Cecelia and Shirley are my aunties," said Scherich, "Cecelia and I both came in to work for the tribe and to improve conditions for the Oglala people and to fight corruption in tribal government, I know that we can work together."

Following the amends and apologies between the two families, Scherich stated she would withdraw her complaints against fire Thunder.

The council unanimously voted to reinstate Fire Thunder as president of the Oglala Sioux tribe with all the power and authority of president.

Over the last two months, Fire Thunder stated she has been working on the finances and she will continue to refocus on working hard on the negotiations with the I.H.S and the BIA and working towards the goal of getting off high risk. She also stated that work will continue on negotiations to write down FFA loan or have the value of the loan written off or reduce the payments to the amount generated by the lease of the land purchased by the original loan.

"We need to work immediately work on a new recall procedure and I plan to move on it right away with the representatives from the judiciary committee, we are going to hammer out recall procedures that is more representative of today's government and present it to the tribal council.We need to finish that and the separation of power and move ahead a secretarial election to amend the constitution" said Fire Thunder.

Fire thunder plans to meet with the chairman of each of the council's standing committees, work on getting legislation ready for the new congress and to work on changing the census numbers used by all of the agencies that work with the Oglala Sioux tribe.

"This is a victory for women, for too long, women have been pushed down and held down," said Fire Thunder.

Women bring strength to our communities and to the nation and we all must work together to build a more positive nation."

Our views

Continuing forward in time 'with less stress'

In Lakota life, time isn't always of the essence, nor is time "money."

With an incredible unemployment rate on most Lakota reservations that isn't going anywhere in the New Year, we don't seem in a rush to do anything drastic to reduce it significantly.

In the business world time really does represent money as a product must be marketed and sold, so that the cash flow is constant and a profit is made.

As we attend to the clock and get anxious over the passing of time, it can cause signficant anxiety.

Stress is a natural by product when we worry about always adhering to the clock.

It isn't always to our benefit as we worry about time, and traditionally Lakota people probably felt the same way.

There is something to be said for taking a relaxed approach to conducting our affairs and being indifferent to the passing of time, and marching to the ticking clocks of the world.

Until we create more jobs and there is more industry and people are bustling to and fro, let's just commit ourselves to a continuing relaxed approach to life in the new year.

Lakota people knew that stress, anxiety, and all of the technological advances would make for a world that runs around at a frantic pace and goes against the grain of Lakota thought.

The Lakota term "wahwala" is a term that implies peace, quiet and calm and has great application to our lives today.

Be nice to yourself.

Special Column

She also served: a column for and about women veterans

Dear SAS:

I have problems with nightmares. My husband tells me that I cry out in my sleep a lot. I never used to do this, but it has been happening since I got back from the war.

There were things that happened while I was in the Army that are hard to talk about. My dreams are about these things. Will they ever go away?

Dear Reader:

First of all, you are not alone when you say you are having bad dreams that are based on military experiences. Many soldiers and veterans of war have experienced these things. Some speak of dreams that are so real it is like living a bad event all over again.

Sometimes one dream may keep coming back to you and you might question why it does. This is a very real problem because it robs you of sleep, and the bad dreams have a way of re-traumatizing you.

People find their own ways of coping with this problem. Some individuals avoid going to sleep because they are afraid they will have more nightmares.

They stay up for long periods and try to stay busy thinking that if they get exhausted enough, they will sleep without dreaming. Some individuals have used alcohol to the extent they pass out because they feel it is the only way they can sleep without dreaming. These are unhealthy ways to cope with this problem.

You did not say which war was a part of your military experience. If the dreams have been going on for many months, or years, and are not lessening in frequency; it would be a good idea for you to contact a mental health counselor.

You say that you experienced some things that are hard to talk about and the dreams are about those things. Meeting with a counselor who is trained to treat trauma can help.

A trained counselor will respect your need for confidentiality, and can offer you education and healthy coping skills that will help you with the stress you experience because of the dreams. There is professional staff at VA clinics and Vet Centers who are trained to treat problems such as yours.

Not only do they treat persons who have experienced trauma in combat situations, but they are also trained to help individuals who may have been traumatized by sexual assault while in the military. I encourage you to contact your local VA clinic or Vet Center for help.

Dear SAS:

Ever since I got out of the military I have felt nervous. My family keeps asking me why I am so jumpy all the time.

I don't have a good answer. Sometimes I am so nervous that my heart starts pounding and I feel like I am having a heart attack.

My family gets angry because I have been drinking to calm myself down. But I don't know what else to do.

Dear Reader:

Anxiety can be frightening, especially when it becomes as severe as you describe. You may feel like you can never have a calm spirit.

You have also chosen a path that many use to "calm their nerves." Using alcohol or drugs for this is called self-medicating. It is a dangerous way to treat your symptoms because it often leads to a cycle of addiction.

One of the reasons why you are nervous is because you were trained to be on alert in the military. You were taught that danger lurked and safety for yourself and for those with whom you served was of high importance.

For some women, there was even the added perspective that because they were women they were treated differently by their male counterparts.

Some have said they felt they needed to work twice as hard to be considered half as good as male soldiers. This added another layer of anxiety.

Anxiety can be treated with good stress management. This includes healthy diet and exercise. Physical activity, such as walking, using exercise equipment, dancing, or participating in ball games, can help reduce the nervousness you feel.

Using relaxation techniques is also very helpful. These include breathing exercises and muscle relaxation. There are CD's and audio tapes available in stores that are specifically made to help people relax.

In cases as severe as yours, professional intervention is generally required.

This would involve working with a counselor to learn and practice good stress management. It might also involve being prescribed medications specifically for anxiety.

It is important for you to learn other ways to treat your anxiety other than using alcohol.

Not only is addiction a potential problem, but abusing alcohol can lead to many other physical problems which result in loss of good health.

Resolutions worth keeping regarding addictions

BY KARI DARON
Preventionist Southern Hills Alcohol and Drug Hot Springs, S.D.

It's that time again: A new year, new beginnings and new resolutions. How many of us have started each January with the same promise of eating less, getting more organized or quitting a bad habit like smoking, drinking or even doing drugs, only to find that after a week or two, the resolutions and that resolve to change some-how lose their luster. Reality sets in that change is hard. Without allowing our-selves to admit defeat, we subtly slide back into our old habits.

Some resolutions, however, are more than worth the extra effort to keep:

The resolution to quit using the drugs (including nicotine and alcohol) that can lead to life-shattering addictions. The other resolution that is imperative to keep is getting help for any dependency on a chemical substance.

The first, and often the most difficult step is admitting that an addiction exists. Denial is a major problem for those who have become dependent on alcohol or other drugs.

Those who are dependent will experience some of the following things:

1. An insatiable craving for the substance upon first waking and at other times during the day and night.
2. Prefer it over eating or other activities
3. Lie to others about it and/or hide it from others
4. Spend money on it before other important purchases or payments
5. Borrow or take money from friends/family to purchase it
6. Care more about using it than family, friends, work or other responsibilities
7. Feel restless, irritated, nauseated or even panicky without it

Because addiction causes bio-psychosocial changes in the body, brain and social interactions, it is actually a disease.

Like any disease, it must be treated or it gets worse.

Chemical and biological changes have happened that make "just stopping" next to impossible. It's like a diabetic saying "I'm going to stop being a diabetic!" It doesn't work that way. Just as a diabetic needs help to keep their disease in check, so does the addict.

If you are one of those who has made a New Year's Resolution to quit smoking, drinking or doing drugs, the first step is seeking help. Tell your family and friends what you want to do and ask for their support. Stay clear of those who won't support you.

Set a "quit date". Dispose of the drug and stay out/ away from people and places where it's available. Level with yourself that you are going to feel bad for awhile and it will be difficult, but NOT impossible. Remain committed. Talk to a doctor or drug counselor and ask for the help you will need to get you through it. Don't try to do it alone; that's the quickest path to relapse.

Take the steps to quit today!

Make 2006 your happiest year ever!

We should never forget those who made the sacrifice at Wounded Knee

Dear Editor:

By way of introduction, I am Belva Hollow Horn-Emery, a full-blood member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe born and raised at Wounded Knee. Dec. 29, 2005, as I stood with my family next to the Mass Grave at Wounded Knee, my thoughts were of the day of the actual Wounded Knee Massacre in 1890.

I looked across the valley down to the Owicakte or Killing Fields on the prairie near Wounded Knee Creek and began to relive the terror and pain my ancestors felt just before they were slaughtered by the remnants of the 7th U.S. Cavalry.

I remember stories I was told of my great grandfather Toka Kokipapi or "His Enemies Fear Him." His name was erroneously translated as Afraid of Enemy by the employees at the Cheyenne River Agency when they recorded the names of the members of Big Foot's Band. During the Massacre, he was shot nine times and lived in pain the rest of his life from

A vision of Rosebud Cafe' and the mystique of the Lakota

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The New Year reminds me of all of the good things I should have done in my lifetime. Maybe this year I will do at least some of them. I have greatly enjoyed this forum for expressing my ideas.

If I were younger I would re-open the Rosebud Café and we would have some fine dining for all of the Rosebud to enjoy. You see, there used to be a Rosebud Cafe in the 1970s. I remember going to a dance at night there and afterward writing a poem called "Slow dancing at the Rosebud Café." I bet many of the younger people didn't know there was a café there or much care. I wonder if they are curious to know who the subject of that poem was. I think it was the night I got kicked in the shin.

Anyway, my version of the Rosebud Café would be dedicated to the mystique of the Lakota. It would have beautiful artifacts and the motif would be dripping with nuances of Lakota life.

It would have private booths were couples could talk in private or travelers could tell tall tales and others simply might want some privacy. Or young men could try to woo their young lady friends and slow dance in the aisles if they wished. There used to be a restaurant in Denver called Stuart Anderson's and they had such private booths and it was kind of fun. It would have paintings by Martin Red Bear, Bobby Penn, and Daniel Little Soldier. I have met each of those artists and was duly impressed with their work.

My café would be a great model of small business ownership and it would be visited by food critics the world over. It would be designated a five star establishment by the connoisseurs of the world and I would be slowly headed for retirement while laughing all the way to the bank.

Actually, that's all funny now, as I live in a mobile home and will have to rely on an old age pension to help support my child's college education one day. Oh well, that's what I get for being an older daddy. We're hoping that his grades are good enough to get into an Ivy League school and then he can be all the things I never was. It's funny how we long for material things and such accomplishments when those are things that don't make any difference when we pass on. Go figure!

The atmosphere in my café would be interesting and exciting all wrapped up in one. It would be the place where deals are closed and old friends congregated at times. In the old days, I bet there were places that always had the coffee pot on and people could stop by anytime. The Rosebud Café would be like that; it would be a place where you could get an occasional free meal because the owner knew you or they might even give you a ride home if you were stranded on a cold night.

In my café, there would be no envy or jealousy and certainly no talk of methamphetamine. My patrons would be upstanding young Lakota gentlemen and ladies who were concerned about the preservation of our Lakota language, the care of our elders, the education of our very young and the future of our tribe. It would be an idyllic place where time occasionally stood still and we had time to be nice to each other. No one would care if you went to Harvard or if you had a big snooty job where your underlings or your board worked to protect you.

It would be a place where you might see "Whose who in Sioux country" dining out. You might see John Around Him, Bat Pourier or Cecilia Fire Thunder from Oglala country eating their favorite sub sandwich. If you were lucky you might catch a glimpse of Rosebud's own Lionel Bordeaux, Pat Bad Hand, or our old friend Floyd Westerman trying their hand at an Indian taco.

Who knows, you might even see Orval Looking Horse, Ivan Looking Horse, or even Emmanuel Red Bear or Manny Iron Hawk from up Cheyenne Eagle Butte way slurping wahanpi and wojapi. Actually, I would want to see Shania Twain eating a salad at my café, but that's another story.

Yes, the New Year is always a time of hope and re-examination of where we are going. It doesn't matter what we conclude as we are moving forward in time anyway.

The only thing we need to remember is that no matter what we do, we only have one chance to come this way and we should do it right. We need to cherish our friends, feed the hungry, care for the young children, protect our tribal land base and hope that tunkasila sees fit to give us good health and healing each day.

It's been fun to write for the Lakota Country Times as I have gotten to know a lot of fine Lakota people whom I would have otherwise never met. I hope the journey continues in the New Year.

Things to empower yourself

A different take to New Year's resolutions

By Patty Pourier

Did you make a New Years Resolution? Have you broken it yet?

I did not make a New Years Resolution this year. Not because my life is going great and needs no resolve, but more because of lack of performance on past New Years Resolution- failures. I am not alone in bombing out on a well-intentioned New Years Resolution. Most of us break our resolution by the end of January.

New Years is a time when we STOP our busy lives for a moment and reflect on the past and look forward to the future. A resolution is another way of saying you are setting goals for yourself. I, for one, have done this countless time in the past. Sometimes on New Years in the form of a resolution, or in high school when trying to determine what I wanted to be when I grew up. I have attended countless self-help workshops that required setting goals. One workshop was called "Falling Awake" where you had these little 3 x 5 cards and you constantly were writing down things you wanted in your life.

I do believe that may have worked to some degree. What has been the most successful for me is put out the positive energy toward something good. Negative energy never works. I also have to decide if I want this, or if someone else wants me to do this. For instance, quitting smoking. I had to ask myself, do I want to quit, or do I just want to make my spouse stop bugging me. Then, I realize that if I could have done this on my own, I would have, and that I need help. Prayer and enlisting God as part of my support staff, is a good decision. (I don't always do it.)

Other support is also important, like a support group, or a commitment to a friend that I will do this or that and they can help make me accountable. The real test is using the support, not just determining what the support will be. Spraining your ankle, going to the drug store to get a brace, purchasing it, then never putting it on. Support does not work very well unless you use it!

The last thing I have found to help, I learned almost 25 years ago. And that is taking it one day at a time. I could never have quit drinking or smoking for the rest of my life.

But I could quit for one day. I remember in the early days of quitting where I had to take it one hour at a time. I would tell myself, I cannot quit forever, but I can quit for this next hour. Then I would go the next hour and so on and so forth.

If I were to make a resolution this year, it would have been to lose weight. But instead, I am trying a new approach.

I am committing to a weekly nutritional meeting, exercise at least once week and to modify my diet, with healthier food. You will notice I did use the word "diet". I have done every diet you can think of and they all work as long as you stay on them. Then when you go off they do not work any longer.

Life changes and old habits are not easy to change. Sometimes bad habits started from observing our parents.

If these behaviors that are detrimental to our well-being have taken years to form, they will not go away over night either.

Trying to change is the key. And to keep trying and not giving up is important. Being kind to our selves and not beating ourselves up when we slip is what will help to facilitate success.

Patience, love and kindness to ourselves, mixed with determination and resolve for real change, can help us reach our goals.

Best to you for this New Year.

Wounded Knee

the wounds he received at the Owicakte.

My husband, little girls and I stood, cold and shivering in the sleet, as the Oomaka Tokatakiya or Future Generations Riders passed by and shook our hands. I felt truly honored by the riders who sacrificed themselves to travel in the extreme cold, horseback, from the Land of Sitting Bull and Spotted Elk to Wounded Knee.

Each year these brave Lakota men and women endure the elements to commemorate the journey of Sitting Bull's People and that of Chief Big Foot and his Band as they did their best to find a safe place for the old people, women and children.

I have listened to recordings my husband's grandfather, James E. Emery, made of Chief Dewey Beard telling of his personal experiences before during and after the Wounded Knee Massacre. As Beard tells it in Lakota:

Chief Big Foot was lying in a buckboard, sick unto the death from pneumonia and bleeding from the lungs as he and his wife, and the rest of their relatives were escorted by armed guard from Porcupine Butte down to the Wounded Knee Valley.

December 29, 2005 was extremely cold and I couldn't help but think of how my ancestors suffered from the elements; they didn't have the choice of getting warm in a heated vehicle.

They were cold, thirsty and hungry; some were literally in rags. Many were sick. Surely, they were terrified. After Sitting Bull was assassinated, Big Foot and his people knew they were all in great danger.

I am proud that my husband, a descendant of the Itazipco Leader Wa-a-natan or Charger who survived the Massacre, our girls and I, a descendant of Toka Kokipapi and He Hlogeca Win or Hollow Horn Woman who was killed at the Massacre, were there at the Owicakte to share prayers, ceremony and fellowship with all our relatives.

I pray for the Riders and all our people will have long lives, good health and happiness. I also pray that we will never forget those who made the supreme sacrifice at Wounded Knee and elsewhere so that the Lakota Oyate could survive.

Bear Butte land trust fund started

RAPID CITY - After years of concern, a Bear Butte Land Trust Fund was opened at Wells Fargo Bank by a volunteer group, Defenders of the Black Hills.

Three years ago, the idea for a land trust fund was brought to the organization at one of their regular meetings. The idea was triggered by the encroaching development upon the sacred mountain, Bear Butte. People from more than 60 Native American Tribes from the North American continent travel to Bear Butte on a yearly basis to conduct prayer ceremonies. The encroaching development is beginning to disturb the peace and quiet that is necessary for the ceremonies.

A land trust fund was seen as the only permanent solution to stopping the selling of land surrounding the small sacred mountain. The organization was able to stop the building of an outdoor shooting range that was planned for four miles north of the Butte. The businessmen planning the venture had illegally received federal funds slated for use by low and middle-income people. The illegality was uncovered in a lawsuit filed by Defenders and seven Native American tribes. But now, a private operator is planning on building a biker bar and outdoor concert arena just one and a half miles from the base of the mountain.

Since many people want to help protect the land surrounding Bear Butte, the organization decided that opening a land trust fund would allow everyone the opportunity to do fund raising events and contribute to the fund. The price of the land surrounding the Butte is high as realtors use the sacred mountain in their advertisements.

Defenders plan on keeping any land that they are able to purchase in a natural state to insure the sacredness of Bear Butte is not disturbed.

They work on environmental and sacred site issues in the Midwest with no paid staff. Donations to the Bear Butte Land Trust Fund may be sent to Wells Fargo Bank, 825 St. Joseph St., Rapid City, SD 57701. Bank transfers are also available by contacting any Wells Fargo Bank.

Plans taking shape for pow wow grounds and art market in Rapid City

RAPID CITY (AP) - Plans are taking shape for a project here that would feature a powwow grounds, living history village and an outdoor market showcasing American Indian art.

The nonprofit Alliance of Tribal Tourism Advocates, which represents all nine Indian tribes in South Dakota, is proposing the project and expects to soon begin looking for land around Rapid City.

Last November, the city council approved an $812,000 request from the group to the build the market and powwow grounds.

``This year, we will be moving forward into finding land and design of the powwow garden and markets,'' said Daphne Richards Cook, executive director of ATTA.

The city will release the money in 2007 for project construction, she said.

Wyss Associates has been working with the organization on an architectural design.

``It's a place for learning, a place for entrepreneurship, and a great place to develop friends,'' said Patrick Wyss, a spokesman for the firm.

Michael Stanley, a landscape architect with Wyss Associates, said the group is looking for a site between 6 acres and 8 acres in size.

As proposed, the project would feature a large entrance plaza, a landmark tipi, seating for 5,000 people, and performance stage, said Stanley.

``On the south side of the arena, we have the actual open market,'' he said.

The permanent structure will house 38 artists and their wares.

A berm surrounding the arena would include native plants that would tie into the living history area of the center, said Stanley.

The living history area is planned as a way for visitors to learn firsthand about Indian culture, officials said.

``It will be a way to teach our children the different cultural preservation pieces, but it will teach the audience that comes into center, too,'' Richards Cook said.

Dr. Bea Medicine, well known Lakota anthropologist dies

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

BISMARCK, N.D. - Dr. Bea Medicine (Hinsha Waste Agli Win) of the Standing Rock Sioux reservation died on December 19, 2005 in Bismarck, ND at the age of 82. Medicine was well known on the northern plains as one of the early advocates of Native education. She tirelessly worked to advance her ideas through her teaching and writing. Her works were published by the University of Illinois entitled, "Learning to be an Anthropologist and remaining Native" in 2001. Born on the Standing Rock Sioux reservation in 1923, she earned a bachelor's degree at South Dakota State University in 1945. Her field of study, anthropology, is a discipline that studies the relationships and customs of many cultures. Her master's degree was earned at Michigan State University in 1954, while her doctoral degree from the University of Wisconsin was completed in 1983. She was teaching there at that time.

Medicine had a very rich background as her varied writings will attest. Her work in pedagogy took her to the Haskell Institute in the early days, and then to Santa Domingo Pueblo in New Mexico to Flandreau Indian School in South Dakota. She taught at some of the leading universities across the nation and influenced the lives of other Native educators in her travels. She often could be seen at a reception in Washington, DC or a seminar at a leading university.

Dr. Bea Medicine

She also had a great interest in working with Native people of Canada, and with her training in the social sciences, she was able to give testimony on behalf of Native people in a variety of settings. She was also known for her leadership in advocating for Indian centers in the United States and Canada, as they were an important and novel idea during the 1960's for urban Indians.

Medicine traveled the world over and continued to touch people's lives with her teaching and writing. This work over a lifetime brought her much recognition and several honorary doctorates. In the Malinowski Award Monographs "Bea Medicine; Culture Broker among Indians and Anthropologist" Thomas Weaver wrote, "In addition to studying such topics as contemporary religious movements, pan-Indianism, Dakotaethnohistory, and reservation culture, she acted as a go-between for tribes and governments and served as a representative for American Indian and women's interests in many national and international meetings. In her 1996 Malinowski Award address, Medicine explored the often ambivalent relationship between anthropologist and American Indians, a relationship that she spent much of her career mediating."

The Bronislaw Malisnowsi Lifetime Achievement Award was awarded by the society of applied anthropology. Among her other awards were, the Outstanding Woman of Color Award from the National Insitute of Women of Color, and the Ohana Award from the American Counseling Association.

It was reported that she was also advocating for a new pubic community school in her home community of Wakpala after she returned home from her long career in teaching and learning.

Native American Business Enterprise receives $155,000 grant

WASHINGTON, DC – Native American Business Enterprise Center that serves both North and South Dakota will receive $155,000 in funding to provide business assistance services.

"Economic hardship and high unemployment rates are unfortunate realities on many reservations in South Dakota," said Sen. Tim Johnson.

"The Native American Business Enterprise Center provides important services to combat these negative trends by helping to generate more Native-owned and operated businesses," Johnson said.

The Native American Business Enterprise Center will provide standardized business assistance to minority-owned firms in North and South Dakota in order to increase the financing and contracts awarded to the firms. Services provided by the center include marketing, general management, personnel, administration, financing, and accounting.

The grant is being awarded by the U.S. Department of Commerce's Minority Business Development Agency, which funds the center.

Woman pleads guilty in Wind River meth bust

CASPER, Wyo. (AP) A woman has pleaded guilty to charges related to distribution of methamphetamine and other drugs on the Wind River Indian Reservation.

In U.S. District Court on Friday, Donna Goodman acknowledged buying drugs and selling them out of her home on the reservation. She also acknowledged making threats against a federal agent.

Goodman is one of 19 people arrested last May as part of a federal drug investigation. Many of those arrested are related to one another.

Goodman told Chief U.S. District Judge William Downes that the threats were intended as a hoax. Agents monitoring Goodman's telephone line apparently heard the threats.

`We knew our phones were tapped," Goodman said. ``We were going to see what was going to happen."

Goodman insisted the threats she made over the phone were not serious, but she acknowledged the agent hearing them would not be aware of her intent.

She gave brief responses to questions aimed at establishing the basis for her guilty pleas. Goodman said she and her husband, John Goodman, bought large quantities of prescription pills, consumed some of them and sold others.

``I had arthritis, and he had arthritis," Goodman said.

Goodman also recounted how her family sold drugs out of their home, often selling to more than 20 people in a day.

A sentencing hearing is tentatively scheduled for March 20.

Others arrested included Goodman's husband and other relatives, including Lynda Munnell-Noah, a tribal judge. The investigation eventually resulted in 25 arrests.

Several, including Munnell-Noah, were named only in an indictment reporting a scheme to purchase and sell prescription drugs, mostly painkillers such as hydrocodone.

Munnell-Noah has pleaded innocent to conspiracy and drug distribution charges.

Munnell-Noah was scheduled for a change of plea hearing earlier in December. That hearing was delayed, apparently as a result of her need for medical treatment.

Debate swirls as wind power grows rapidly across country

BY JOHN CHRISOFFERSEN
AP Business Writer

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) - Giant windmills are popping up on farms, scenic mountain ridges, prairie grass and now an Indian reservation, dramatically changing the nation's landscape and spinning a debate about where they belong.

Wind power grew rapidly in 2005, becoming more competitive as natural gas prices jumped and crude oil prices reached record highs. Improved technology, a federal tax credit and pressure on utilities to use clean energy sources helped fuel the growth from coast to coast.

Officials in Atlantic City, N.J., in December dedicated the nation's first coastal wind farm. And last week, General Electric Co. announced a start-up near San Diego of the largest wind power farm on Indian land.

Last year, Klickitat County in south-central Washington state took a bold step by creating a so-called Energy Overlay Zone, a planning tool aimed at expediting renewable energy development.

Wind developers, who often face bitter battles with locals who object to massive turbine farms, say it's the first such zone in the country.

A green energy company plans to build a $100 million wind farm in Eastern Oregon. As many as 70 turbines will generate up to 104 megawatts of power, enough to serve 25,000 homes. Zilkha Renewable Energy's power will be delivered via Idaho Power's high-voltage transmission lines that run near the site.

Wind power still makes up less than 1 percent of the nation's electricity, but experts expect wind to generate at least 5 percent by 2020.

``The wind resource in the United States is comparable to the oil resource in Saudi Arabia," said Tom Gray, deputy executive director of the American Wind Energy Association, an industry trade group. ``It's a major strategic national resource we should be making every effort to develop."

While windmills may evoke quaint images of yesteryear, they're sparking growing debate, particularly as the first offshore projects are proposed in popular tourist areas, such as Cape Cod, Long Island, N.Y., and the New Jersey shore. Critics, including a member of the influential Kennedy family, worry that some projects could harm national treasures.

``All of a sudden you're transferring an asset used by 5 million people into the hands of private industrial speculators," said Robert F. Kennedy Jr., an environmentalist who has objected to the Cape Cod proposal.

The industry added about 2,500 megawatts of wind power this year, a record 35 percent increase, according to the association. The country's wind capacity is more than 9,200 megawatts in 30 states, enough for 2.4 million average U.S homes.

In September, a report by the Government Accountability Office, Congress' investigative arm, found that the federal government offers minimal oversight in approving wind power plants. The report urged federal officials to take a more active role in weighing the impact of wind power farms on bird and bat deaths, saying local and state regulators sometimes lack the necessary expertise.

Wind projects have sparked complaints around the country that the windmills cause noise, obstruct scenic views and kill wildlife, including thousands of federally protected birds in California.

In Maryland, state officials have sought to limit 420-foot windmills atop the state's highest mountain ridge because of concerns about the impact to rare species.

A proposal to build offshore wind turbine towers along the New Jersey shore led to a 15-month moratorium on such projects while a special panel studies the issue.

A wind farm planned in a small town in Vermont has sparked criticism that the nearly 400-foot towers would ruin the rural landscape and hurt tourism.

In Kansas, conservation groups have asked state officials to create guidelines for wind energy developments, citing concerns that more wind farms will harm the last remnants of the nation's prairie grass and prairie chicken populations.

Proponents say bird kills have been minimal at most wind farms, though Gray acknowledged some bird kills. They say the visual impact is far less severe than other forms of energy such as oil drilling.

Wind power helps lower skyrocketing home heating and electric bills by reducing the demand for natural gas and brings new jobs, rural economic development and tax revenue to cash-strapped states, proponents say.

In McCamey, Tex., Mayor Sherry Phillips said the population has dwindled over the decades from about 10,000 to 1,800 as oil dried up. But these days the area is remaking itself as the wind farm capital of Texas, collecting millions of dollars in taxes and creating 40 to 50 jobs from 860 wind turbines, she said.

The wind power added this year will offset the emission of about 7 billion pounds of carbon dioxide, equivalent to keeping nearly 500,000 SUVs off the road, the association said.

``If we could just find a way to make them invisible," Gray said, ``we'd have something everybody could get behind."

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna:

Hello, Happy New Year and hope your year is a great one. I try to make an effort to read your columns every week and right now I am in need of your advice and guidance. I am with a man right now and he's with me every day as we live together and we have a child together. But I'm not happy in this relationship, I feel like I wasn't happy for a long time because of something that happened awhile ago.

Now I have been having conversations with a different man and we have even seen each other a few times. Sometimes I feel bad because of what I'm doing but the man I've been talking to does make me happy and he makes me feel good when I'm with him.

However he does have kids and I know he has his priorities to them and it doesn't bother me but now I'm wishing I never got myself into this. I'm so confused in my life right now and if I could I wish I could get away from both of them and stay away.

But I feel like I'm stuck here. But I know nobody is to blame except me. I put myself in this position and now I want to get out. What do you see for me and how do you think I should approach this in my life?

Feels Stuck

Dear Stuck:

Simply put, your life is in your control as is your happiness. Relationships are complex and have many layers of reasons, understandings, agreements, lessons, endurance, and emotional inticacies.

Every relationship with others is based on a reflection of our own true nature. When you are "trapped" in a non-fulfilling relationship because of a sense of obligation or fear the relationships itself will not work because those are the strongest elements holding it together. Those two elements do not provide a sound foundation for a good relationship, but do provide a sound foundation for the ending of a relationship.

One of the strongest working forces around you is the central theme of "looking" or "searching" for happiness outside of self. This means you expect others to "make you happy." Fortunately for all of us, our happiness cannot depend on others ability to amuse us and keep us placated and amused - because if it does, then others dissapointments and frustrations with their lives and us within their lives becomes the souce of your internal identity and emotional well-being.

This leaves you defenseless to enjoy your own life. The point is, understand that your symptomatic happiness in the relationship is just your internal decision to get out - without the practical excuse of it being somebody's fault for some reason or another. It is just over, and you are just realizing it, the damage is done and you can't reconcile your life with living in that shadow. The new man is just a toy girl - an amusement - somebody to keep you occupied and to show you that you are not content in your relationship - that you want something - someone - different. He is a catalyst don't assign him some other unattainable role. You will be single in the near future. You will struggle with this decision for a while and will invite some grief and chaos into the separation.

You will find yourself seeking more understanding through a University connection and will enhance your career goals and energy.

I see you in the future working with the legal aspects of business and life, two major ex's in your life and several inconsiquential ones, a new man with children, a different home and surroundings.

It will all work out. This uncomfortable time in your life is one of personal growth and is where you learn to take control of your own happiness through your own perspective and creation of your own dream.

It is where you truly learn your are responsible for self and self-awareness; that all problems that are within your life are drawn to you through your own energy and relationship with your own assessment of how you are creating your life. Blessings, It's a rough journey right now, but it is with purpose and you will survive.

Dear Anna:

I'm seriously thinking about having a long distance relationship in hopes that if this works for us that he would relocate to California. What do you think? Thank you!!!

Looking for him to move

Dear Looking:

What if he wrote the same letter but is hoping that you will relocate to where he wants to be? How do you see it then? It won't work unless you decide the amount of personal flexibility you have - what you are willing and want to do - how much you would change for a different outcome. He can't move to California, he just can't. He has too many logistical and business issues to be able to move within your timeframe.

He could move, comfortably, say in three to five years. You could move too, it's just a decision not an obstacle. This relationship depends on your ability to be flexible without resentment or a sense of "doing all the giving." Good Luck.

Dear Anna:

My boyfriend and I went to a New Year's party with a bunch of friends. My boyfriend disappeared around 11 p.m. for about an hour and came back just before midnight. He said he was hanging out with some of the guys in the garage but I don't think so. Where was he?

Don't Trust Him

Dear Don't Trust Him:

In the garage, hanging out with five or six guys and two or three women, smoking and joking - just like he said. Why didn't you search for him? Ask yourself that question. Are you so insecure in the relationship that you felt he would resent you looking for him? I am not talking about stalking him - you went with him to a party, after fifteen minutes of a disappearance it is quite acceptable to go and find him - and if you are so desperate for his approval that you wouldn't dare "search" for him, because it might aggravate him, then look at that insecurity and fix it before it fixes you.

And, if you are correct and he would resent you searching for him then you are correct, he is up to something - so dump his butt - who needs it?

Dear Anna:

I am 15 year old. I am a pretty good student and althlete, and I am a pretty good kid. I know that sooner or later I am going to want to have sex, mostly right now because of curiousity. I don't want to get pregnant but I don't feel free to talk to my mom about this. What can I do?

Want to prepare

Dear Wants to prepare:

Talk with your mother's sister, she will talk with your mom...your mom will talk with you. She will be okay with your honesty and although she will worry about the pitfalls of emotional injury and entaglement of an adult relationship by someone she considers less than an adult - it will all work out. You will get an appointment with a clinic with your mom, and I'm sorry to say, a small lecture (they forget that you have been thinking about this for a long time, and considering what could happen and what it means). Sorry about the lecture part, but you will live through it. Blessings to you.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868 @ gwtc.net or fax to (605) 455-1870, or write to PO Box 406, Kyle, S.D. 57750. Clearly mark Ask Anna on your request.

In Loving Memory of My Daughter
Lori C. Kills Crow Indian
December 5, 1984 - August 26, 2003

Another Christmas Came and went, without you.
Our Hearts are heavy with sorrow, always missing you, silent tears still flow.
I'll lend you for a little time, a child of mine, God said,
For you to love while she lives and mourn when she dies.
It may be 2 or 4 years or maybe 18 years, but you will love her 'til I call her back.
Take care of her for me.
She'll bring you charms to gladden you,
and shall her stay be brief,
you'll have her lovely memories as solace for your grief.
I can't promise she will stay, since all from Earth return, but there are lessons taught down there, I want this Child to learn.
I've looked the wide work over, In my search for teacher's true, and from the crowd of life's lane, I have selected her,
How you give her all your love, not think the labor in vain, nor hate me when I came to take her back. I fancied that I heard them say. "Dear Lord, thy will be done" for all the Joy they child shall bring, the risk of grief well run.
I will shelter her with tenderness, I will love her while here on earth, and for the happiness I have known. Forever, grateful stay. but when the Angels called her much sooner than planned I'll brave the bitter grief that comes and surely I will try to understand so whenever I am troubled and when everything goes wrong,
It is just God working in me to make my spirit strong.
Missing you always

Tribes to get money for heating assistance

SIOUX FALLS (AP) _ South Dakota will get $639,000 from the federal government to help low-income households pay heating and energy bills, the Department of Health and Human Services said Thursday.

The funds are part of $100 million nationwide that will go to states, tribes and territories as part of the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program, the department said.

South Dakota's congressional delegation applauded the decision.

About $517,000 is expected to go to the state and about $112,000 will go to American Indian tribes, according to Sen. Tim Johnson's office.

St. Francis woman admits to stealing $57,000 from town

PIERRE (AP) - A former finance officer for St. Francis has admitted stealing more than $57,000 from the Rosebud Indian Reservation town, the U.S. Attorney's Office said in a release.

Mercy Red Crow of St. Francis, also known as Mercy Arcoren, pleaded guilty to larceny in U.S. District Court in Pierre.

Prosecutors said she wrote numerous checks to herself from the town's bank accounts between July and August.

Red Crow could get up to five years in prison and a fine when she is sentenced in April.

Lakota warrior killed in Iraq

Returns home on Saturday to Kyle

BY TIMES STAFF

KYLE - A young Oglala Sioux, Lance Corporal Brett Lundstrom was killed while on patrol in Iraq.

Lundstrom served with Echo Company, 2nd Battalion of the 6th Marines and was shot in the shoulder while patrolling with two others Marines who were also killed. The small arms attack occurred in Anbar Province near Fallujah, Iraq on Sunday, Jan. 8.

Lundstrom is the son of Doyla Carol (Underbaggage) Lundstrom of the Medicine Root district on the Pine Ridge reservation. According to his mother, "Brent loved being a Marine. He died believing in the cause he was fighting for."

The Associated Press maintains a running tabulation of military deaths in Iraq. As of Saturday, 2,199 members of the U.S. military have died since the war began in March 2003. This count does not include the 12 soldiers who were killed on Saturday when their Blackhawk helicopter crashed. The AP reported that three Marines were killed by small arms attacks in Fallujah and at the time, were not releasing any names. Fallujah is located 35 miles west of Baghdad.

Lundstrom was born on June 12, 1983 in Vermillion. He joined the U.S. Marine Corps in January 2003 and had tours of duty in Afghanistan as well as Iraq. His parents are Ed and Doyla (Underbaggage) Lundstrom. His father Edward Lundstrom lives in Detroit, Mich. and his mother, Doyla, is from Black Hawk.

Brett was charismatic, with a kind and generous soul; always humorous with a smile that lit up any room or place he entered. Brett, an enrolled member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, whole-heartedly served his country.

Brett loved spending time with his family, friends and relatives and enjoyed his time in the Marines. He also loved his Washington Capitals and a variety of other sporting events.

Brett attended many schools, as his father was a career Marine Officer. The family moved to many places

Big Crow suspended by OST council

PINE RIDGE - "Mr Big Crow has been violating his oath of office and the tribal constitution and by-laws by not looking out for the best interests of the tribe and instead looking out for the best interests of C&W Enterprises," said Jeff Whalen, Oglala Sioux Tribe Transportation director in a complaint against the council representative from Wakpamni District, "Big Crow violated ordinance 41-26 by use of corrupt conduct and gross incompetence against the tribe and the OST Transportation department by providing false and misleading information and 92-12 by attempting to micro manage a tribal program and circumvent the tribe and the tribal program financial system and entering into a conspiracy against the tribe. The complaint asked for a full unconditional and immediate impeachment of Big Crow and recommended that in the future that Big Crow be disqualified from holding any office of trust or profit under the tribal council.

In a special session of the tribal council held at the SuAnne Big Crow Boy's and Girl's Club outside of Pine Ridge on Thursday, the council voted 8-6 with one not voting to suspend Big Crow and set up a hearing to listen to the charges. Those council reps voting to accept the complaint included: Austin Watkins, Garfield Steele, Juanita Scherich, Mary Poor Thunder, Valerie Janis, Kathy Janis, Will Peters and Lydia Bear Killer; voting against included Tom Poor Bear, Paul Little, Maxine Lakota, Lyle Jack, Philip Good Crow and Craig Dillon. Big Crow hearing voted 12-1 with two not voting to suspend Big Crow with pay.

The council meeting opened with a similar complaint Thursday against Walt Big Crow, brought by Will Peters, council representative from Pine Ridge Village citing misconduct, disloyalty, malfeasance and dishonesty and asking for Big Crow's suspension and impeachment. The council originally voted 8-7 to accept the complaint, a vote that did not include Big Crow's vote. After a review by the tribal attorney, Russell Zephier, the council decided not to accept the vote of Will Peters since it was a council representative making the complaint The result was a 7-7 tie which was broken by Cecelia Fire Thunder, OST president when she voted not to accept the complaint.

The bulk of the complaint centers around the construction company, C&W Enterprises, a Native American owned road construction firm that had been given four road construction, maintenance and gravel hauling contracts on Pine Ridge Reservation since 2003.

"On the strength of a recommendation made by OST transportation director, Jeff Whalen, we terminated C&W's base and blotter contract worth about $2.5 million during a committee meeting on Oct. 16," said Big Crow, who serves on the economic an business development committee, "but we are still waiting for documentation to be submitted."

According to Big Crow, the committee approved a payment of $754,000 for work completed and sent it on to finance for approval and agreed to move on to arbitration an additional $900,000 that was still in dispute. Lyle Jack, council representative from Pine Ridge Village and chairman of the committee, stated that the payment was approved during a committee meeting chaired by Big Crow but the move was rescinded during the next meeting chaired by Jack and that the finance committee did not approve of any payment to C&W.

"Part of the problem lies with the committee and the direction we chose to go," said Jack, "if C&W wanted to pursue action, we voted to have the C&W issue heard by the American Arbitration Association where they would select experienced engineers to review the case whereas Walt discussed the issue with C&W and decided to set up an informal arbitration with a past South Dakota Supreme Court Justice Robert Miller and as for as the quality of their work, we heard from both our engineering firm and BIA inspectors that C&W's work was not up to standards."

In his complaint, Whelan discussed Big Crow's tendency to work around both the committee and the transportation department he felt that was not in the best interests of the tribe.

Overall, there could be as much as $4.5 million in dispute between the tribe and C&W involving the four projects that the road construction firm has been working on since 2003 with the tribe refusing to send the final payment on the first three projects and up to $2.5 million on the base and blotter project all based on questions about work left to be completed and the quality of work that was completed.

By a vote of 8-0 with five not voting the council voted to support a resolution that stated that during the suspension, councilman Big Crow not participate in any council activities or any activities connected to his office and in particular anything to do with the construction of the new casino.

"The confusion surrounding this entire C&W Enterprises issue jeopardizes the sovereignty of the Oglala Sioux Tribe," said outgoing tribal attorney, Pete Caposella, "especially when the attorneys for C&W are prepared to argue that if Mr. Big Crow held himself out as a tribal council member with signature authority, they would litigate that the tribe is bound by it."

Council hires new attorney general and tribal attorneys

PINE RIDGE - With no other applicant in attendance at the council meeting, the tribal council voted Thursday 13-0 to select Alberta Iron Cloud Miller as the attorney general of the Oglala Sioux Tribe dependent upon successful completion of both a background check and a drug test. The council passed a resolution to terminate Dawn Muir, OST attorney general due to job abandonment, by a vote of 13-0.

"It is good to be back in this position," said Iron Cloud Miller, "I really want to work hard to put together a ten year block of funding to support the development of a more stable criminal justice system on the reservation with stronger and more stable funding for both public safety and the tribal court."

Most recently, Iron Cloud Miller worked as director of the tribe's headstart program and previously worked as an associate judge and attorney general as well as a director for the center for substance abuse prevention and director of the Pahin Sinte College Center in Porcupine. Miller has a BA in Criminal Justice from Chadron State, a masters in adult, community and higher education from Montana State University and has completed all the work except the dissertation for a Doctor of Education degree also from MSU.

The death of Marvin Amiotte and the resignation of Peter Caposella created a need for additional tribal attorneys and on Thursday in Pine Ridge, the council voted 10-1 with 1 abstention and one not voting to hire George Patton as a tribal attorney and by a vote of 11-1 with one not voting to hire Thomas Ballanco as a tribal attorney.

Patton, an enrolled member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, just completed his law degree at Arizona State University and earned some experience writing tribal codes for California tribes, working as a clerk for the Hopi Appellate Court and working on tribal federal recognition.

After earning a degree in psychology from West Point, the U.S. Military Academy. He completed ranger training then completed his law degree form the University of Colorado in 1995 and now has nine years of experience in private practice.

The council also voted to rescind an earlier action and to have the judiciary committee come to the next council meeting with a recommendation for a temporary chief judge.

The council also selected John Hussman as a temporary prosecutor for seven weeks while Theresa Two Bulls is in Pierre working as a state senator.

building was the pilot project for the American Indian Higher Education Consortium's Cultural Learning Centers Initiative. Gail Bruce coordinated the project, which succeeded in putting similar log structures on some of the other AIHEC campuses. The New York Institute of Technology designed the log structure, while the American Log Homes Council donated the logs. Dedication ceremonies were held on August 24, 2000. The bronze dedication plaque at the entrance to the center lists some 90 individuals and organizations including the American Indian College Fund, the W. K. Kellogg Foundation, Kevin Costner as well as the present staff at the Heritage Center.

The staff at the SGU Heritage Center includes, Marcella Cash, Director, Keli Herman, Museum Collections Manager, Terry Gray, General Assistant, Don Moccasin, Oral Historian and Jennifer Galindo, Registrar and Archeologist.

Cash noted that, "The SGU Heritage Center seeks to collect and preserve the photographs, diaries, personal papers, oral histories and cultural items which have meaning to the Sicangu people. They will then be here to tell our story to future generations." The most frequently used manuscript collection is the Frank LaPointe Collection of papers relating to his service on the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council and as editor of the Rosebud Sioux Herald. Other collections were donated by or in memory of tribal members, for example the Rufus Eagle Bear Collection, the Francis Bordeaux, Sr. Collection, and the Nellie Menard Collection. Persons who have lived and worked on the reservation or who have otherwise shared our history have also donated their papers and photographs. For example, the Ruth Elizabeth Newberry Photograph Collection consists of photographs taken by a teacher at the Rosebud Boarding School 1926-1928. The center serves as the official repository for the historical records of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe and Sinte Gleska University.

The Center has an ongoing project to scan photographs depicting reservation life from the remote past to the present. The images are then available to researchers or for display in the museum. The staff invites everyone to participate in documenting history by bringing in their images.

Herman summed up the work of the SGU Heritage Center very well when she commented, "We scan images that people donate in order to preserve the history of the Rosebud Sioux people. Donating an image is a good way to honor someone, preserve a memory.

"We have a copy of the image. We give the donor one free copy and we teach them to preserve the original image. More recent images are important too because we try to portray us as we are, as a living, growing and changing culture."

Cash said, "Individuals may place restrictions on use of their donated items. And privacy laws prevent access to some personal materials. However our goal is to provide research materials to all interested persons. Eventually everything we hold will be open to researchers. We have no interest in preserving something no one will ever be able to see."

Cash demonstrated some of the computer data bases maintained at the Heritage Center to assist people with their research. Volunteers have begun transferring information from the Rosebud Agency Census into a computer database. These records start in 1875 and volunteers have entered information through 1903. There is an index to the Records of the Rosebud Mission of the Episcopal Church. One of the databases that the public will find very practical is the "Family Tree Maker." One can enter genealogical data and then have it plotted in several different formats, including a traditional family tree. These data bases are available to cultural and academic researchers and the staff will gladly assist in navigating through some of this material.

There is no admission fee for visiting the museum or archives. Prints and copies are available at a price that allows them to recoup some of their cost.

The center maintains a sign-in book for visitors and attracts individuals doing genealogy research, as well as serious academic scholars conducting a variety of research activities. -

Cash noted that the Heritage Center is open for research and visitors and they would like to see more people utilizing their facilities.

The stated mission of the museum is to "collect, preserve, interpret and exhibit historical, cultural or aesthetic objects that were made or were used by members of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, or that are associated with a person, place or event on the Rosebud Sioux Reservation." The first floor of the Heritage Center is adorned with several glass cases which display cultural objects central to Sicangu life by theme. For example, one case contains beadwork with floral Rosebud designs. Another displays plants and foods used by the Sicangu people such as sage, wild tea, tobacco, turnips, chokecherries, and sweet grass.

Yet another case has a peach colored star quilt by Ollie Napesni, a buckskin dress from the Bedford Collection dated 1936 by Pete Big Hawk of Pine Ridge, quilled moccasin from the Bedford Collection dated 1940, and a quilled tipi bags collected in the 1930s and a quilled U shaped bag.

The interior of the Heritage Center is very attractive and is able to host small gatherings for talks and seminars. The most recent scholar to present his research was Dick Miller of Boston, MA who shared his research on his great uncle a former BIA Agent at Rosebud in the late 1880s.

The Heritage Center cosponsors the He Sapa Dance Troupe, a group of young people who sang carols and danced for the visitors during Christmas open house. The next open house will occur during the SGU Founder's Day celebration in February.

The staff are committed to "preserving the past for the future." All have pursued academic degrees to help them better carry out their duties. Cash has a Bachelor of Arts degree and a Master of Arts degree from the University of South Dakota. She has completed all but the dissertation requirement for the PhD degree in history from Texas Christian University. Herman has a Bachelor of Arts degree in Art with a minor in Museum Studies from SGU. Gray is working toward a Bachelor of Arts degree from SGU. Galindo holds a Bachelor of Science degree in archeology from the University of New Mexico and a Master of Arts degree from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln in anthropology. Moccasin is working toward a degree in Art from SGU.

Cash, as director of the Heritage Center, is knowledgeable in a comprehensive way as to the functions of the center from archival work to museum administration to personnel supervision. As a Sicangu Lakota, she knows the area and Sicangu people and this is an advantage in her work. The Center is part of the larger preservation community. She said, "If we want to know how to clean a cradleboard for example, we can always get good advice from the Smithsonian's conservation department."

Gray is a long time employee of SGU and is going on twenty years service. He is a student in the cultural resource management program at the university and, as such, is involved in archeological assessment training with Dr. William Akard. Herman has designed the museum exhibits since 2000. She is an artist whose published works include illustrations in a book authored by Lydia Whirlwind Soldier entitled, "Memory Songs." Moccasin has been with the Heritage Center since 2003 and has interviewed many elders about their life experiences.

Galindo is the official Registrar and archeologist for the Heritage Center. An archives and museum is an organized collection of materials and her job is to keep the Center organized using a Past Perfect database to track all items. She has been with the Heritage Center since 1999. For the first five years she received National Park Service funding to locate and document cultural and historical sites on the reservation.

The information is maintained in a Geographic Information System database. The documented sites speak to the long term presence of Sicangu Lakota people in an earlier age when many still lived in tipis.

The Heritage Center can be accessed via the internet as a link through SGU's website. There are pictures of some of the beautiful collections as well as descriptions of other features of the center.

RST council discusses contract with cellular company

The rights of land assignee at issue

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The RST tribal council convened in regular session on Jan. 4 at council headquarters and immediately listened to tribal attorney Steve Emery, and two other attorneys, Terry Pechota and Amanda Wilbur discuss the relevancy of two previous tribal resolutions which heretofore have governed the "right of way" for Western Wireless cellular company which is owned by Altel. Western Wireless has had two cell towers on the reservation since 2004 and today's session was to finalize a lease agreement which would allow full access to a site in Rosebud and one in Mission. Once the lease was approved by RST and Western Wireless, the tribe would be due back lease pay.

Emery said, "Last July, I brought a lease here and ultimately the council determined that it was going to wait. I would like the Rosebud issue settled today." He also said, "Some of the things in the lease are good for the tribe with Western Wireless. The regulations have to be adhered to by those doing business with the tribe."

Emery further noted, "Thirty thousand dollars a year is not much, but it will help to pay legal expenses. I'm not part of the Colombe case. The lease goes back to 2004. I hope you will authorize this with Western Wireless with retroactive fees."

A number of relevant issues came to light during the ensuing discussion, including the fact that the Bureau of Indian Affairs had not conducted an appraisal of the lease acreage in question. Elton Hawk of the BIA Rosebud Agency confirmed this when he said, "We have not done the appraisals and have not pursued the trespass issue. We want to get the leases approved for both sites. We need the sites for the emergency preparedness program."

Richard "Skinny" Colombe is the assignee of the two acres that the cell tower is located in Mission. In the original agreement under discussion RST would receive a fee, as would Colombe from the lease. Fern Bordeaux-Boltz, Rosebud council representative said that Western Wireless was on the reservation illegally and wanted the BIA to pursue trespass litigation against the company.

Attorney Pechota could be heard discussing two resolutions, one dating back to 1986 and the other from 2004. It was the 2004 resolution that was to be re-considered and amended during today's session.

Bordeaux-Boltz took the floor on a number of occasions and discussed a number of issues that have implications for RST land assignees as well as the integrity of the tribe's land holdings. She said, "When a tribal member is given a land assignment the title is always in the name of the Rosebud Sioux tribe. The tribe itself has reserved rights, and the BIA also has regulatory rights." She noted that the tribe has a right to take back an assignment and make a refund to the assignee, pointing out that the land is meant for agricultural use and not to start a business.

Bordeaux-Boltz illustrated an example where an individual who held the original casino housing land assignment agreed to a land exchange with the tribe, so that the current Sicangu Village housing could be built. The assignee knew that the tribe could cancel her assignment, so she took the initiative and agreed to the exchange.

Tony Rogers was given the floor and he said that originally Verizon and AT&T had been contacted about bringing cellular service to the Rosebud, and they had expressed some interest. He said, "It wasn't the intent to cause confusion, but provide cell service. If mistakes were made, I will take responsibility for that. The tribe is entitled to a lot of money going back to 2004 for the Rosebud and Mission site."

Rosebud council representative Ken LaDeaux noted that the engineers specified that the cell towers were to be over a certain height. He said, "The poor cell service is due to incorrect design. If the coverage is not good, why not move it. It is an inconvenience for customers who are paying. If we move it ,this situation is moot."

Rogers said moving the tower is an option. He said, "I want to bring them here and have this body ask them. The FCC is holding up additional towers." Boreaux-Boltz said that she had spoken with Mr. Rieman of Western Wireless and he said he wished he knew that there were other sites available. Finally, Rogers noted that REDCO, the tribal utility commission and the Resource Development office were looking at the possibility of the tribe owning its own cellular service.

The mornings tribal council session was carried live on KINI FM radio, however the afternoon session was not. During the afternoon session there was a resolution passed and an agreement settled on with Western Wireless for the Rosebud cell tower site. The lease which was to be signed by RST president Rodney Bordeaux and RST tribal secretary Gerri Night Pipe contains the land descriptions.

The land is described is described as, "T-11391/TLE Ref. #418 as a Metes and Bounds description within the Southwest Quarter (SW1/4) of Section 10, Township 37 North, Range 30 West containing 5.00 acres more or less."

The issue with the Mission site on the Colombe assignment remained unsettled. It will be addressed in a future council session on Jan. 17.

OPINION PAGE

Remember our Iraq warriors

Lakota country received bad news again from the Iraq war with the loss of Brett Lee Lundstrom. He served with the U.S. Marine Corps and died while on patrol in Fallujah. The price of freedom and of living in a democracy is costly, and it goes up each time a Lakota soldier loses their life in a faraway land. We understand the ultimate sacrifices that are being made by our country, but it does not make it any better when one of your own is brought home in a casket. Lakota people have always proudly served to protect our homeland and that of America. Brett Lee Lundstrom most likely understood the risks and ultimate sacrifice. Many more Lakota people will continue to go to war one day to uphold the security of our nation. The reasons to honor our veterans and active duty soldiers are perfectly clear as we share in the grief and loss of the proud families who have lost loved ones overseas.

It is frightening to speculate on the number of young Lakota men and women who have been detailed to Iraq. Our prayers are with them as the nation assesses the best exit strategy to employ when bringing the troops home. The task of reducing the troop levels in Iraq are best left to the war planners, and in the meantime, the best we can do is say special Lakota prayers and ask that no more Lakota youngsters come home in a coffin.

We are going to estimate that there have been a several hundred Lakota soldiers who have gone to Iraq and returned, or standing by.

The opinions expressed in Letters to the Editor and Opinion Pages are not necessarily that of the editor or staff of the Lakota Country Times.

Notes From Indian Country

Cecelia Fire Thunder is reinstated as president

By Tim Giago

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

The sixty-six day stay in limbo for Cecelia Fire Thunder, the first lady president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, is over.

At a special tribal council meeting held to determine whether to proceed with impeachment or to allow the president to resume her duties, a raft of accusers and supporters turned the proceedings into something that was near comical, or so it would seem if it did not have such serious connotations to the tribal government.

One antagonist even accused Ms. Fire Thunder of genocide. This fabrication even brought smiles to the faces of the grimmest observers. Genocide? This accusation was skimmed from the false assumption that Ms. Fire Thunder had placed all of the tribal lands as collateral for a $38 million loan from the Shakopee of Minnesota. The assumption was that if the tribe failed to pay off the loan and the land was lost, the people would die. Of course the premise was all wrong, but the stretch was beyond the imagination.

The only collateral for the loan was the income the tribe would receive for the leasing of the land. It is hard to bury a rumor on the Pine Ridge Reservation. Perhaps Ms. Fire Thunder needs a good press agent to get the facts out to the tribal members before they become distorted. It couldn't hurt.

The meeting of the tribal council to determine the future of the president dragged on for no apparent reason. Every time a session was scheduled, the incumbent council found a way to postpone it. If it wasn't canceled because of bad weather it was canceled because of the death of a member of the tribe. In the meantime the government of the Oglala Sioux Tribe was rudderless.

What made this special session of the council more ridiculous was apparent from the beginning when Councilman Will Peters brought up impeachment charges against Councilman Walt Big Crow. Another council representative then brought charges against Webster Poor Bear alleging that he should not be a part of the impeachment proceedings since he was a convicted felon. Poor Bear is my hunkake Lakota brother and I know he has a good heart and is trying to find his way to the Good Red Road.

He was stopped for a DUI and is under "suspended imposition" which means he is not charged as a felon, but his record will be permanently sealed if he completes one year without another offense. I know he will make it.

Now, mind you, these were charges that had not been filed with the Tribal Secretary and were not a part of the agenda and had no business being presented at this special session of the council. As a matter of fact, the Tribal Council should have never suspended Ms. Fire Thunder to start with, but instead should have brought allegations against her before a special committee set up to handle such complaints. If the charges had substance then and only then should the Council have put it on their agenda.

I suggest that the Council set up a special committee to sift through allegations against any tribal president or any member of the tribal council or executive committee before it is ever brought to the council floor. To suspend any president or council representative without a hearing should be totally out of the question. In fact, it is probably downright unconstitutional.

Anyhow, Ms. Fire Thunder is now back at the helm and is working around the clock to catch up on the lost 66 days. The OST Council needs to be careful of days with so many sixes in them or they could end up with a spooky 666.

Bea Medicine makes journey to the Spirit World

She could be "hell on wheels" sometimes, but her integrity and personal convictions to justice were unquestionable. Bea Medicine had been my friend for more than 30 years.

Whenever we would run into each other at a convention she would grab my arm and say, "Let's find a place to dance." She loved to dance whether it was the old fashioned two-step or a traditional dance in her full regalia.

She would rather be called "Bea" than by her full name of "Beatrice." She would say, "That name is just a bit too formal for an informal person like me."

Born on the Standing Rock Reservation that straddles North and South Dakota, Bea earned a Master's Degree at Michigan State and a doctorate at the University of Wisconsin. Her major was anthropology and at one time in this country Native American anthropologists could be counted on one hand. She wrote two books about indigenous women and in 2001 her book "Learning to be an Anthropologist and Remaining Indian" was published by the University of Illinois Press.

Bea was the head of the Women's Branch of the Royal Commission on Aboriginal Peoples for the Canadian government and she helped to draft legislation to protect the legal rights of Indian families.

She returned to her home reservation after retiring from a career of teaching that carried her to Stanford, Dartmouth, San Francisco State University, University of Washington, University of Montana and finally to the University of South Dakota.

Bea was one of my best friends and one of my staunchest boosters. I never knew when a letter from her would come along just at the right time to encourage me or to praise me for something I had written.

Bea Medicine was a true Lakota woman and her loss is not only personal, but it is a loss that will be felt by all of the Indian people of Standing Rock for years to come.

They don't make them like her anymore. She was a one-of-a-kind woman who could be fierce and gentle, oftentimes at the same time. I will miss you my friend. I pray that your Journey to the Spirit World is filled with wonders.

Inmate seeks guidance in sweatlodge ways

Dear Editor:

My name is Robert Duane Liebe. I am a 21 year old native. I am Stockbridge Munsee Band of the Mohicans and Oneida Nation. I am not enrolled due to being half or more white.

There are a few reasons I am writing this letter to Lakota Country Times, one of them being that I am in search of help. I know the ways of Onieda and Ojibwe Nations. I also know some of the Lakota Sioux Nation way. I am trying to learn these ways so that I can help these brothers here and in the world.

We have had two different people do the sweatlodge (inipi) here one was 100 percent white who said his teachings are White Earth Ojibwe wolf clan, but he ran the lodge sitting in between the north and west door. They guy now just comes and sit in the east, but does nothing at all while in the lodge.

I got real sick at the last sweat I went to in August 2005 and stopped going to the lodge here. I know the guy from the streets. I used to help my uncle with the lodge at this other person's house in Caledonia, Wis. The brothers here deserve better spiritual guidance.

The other reason is that I will be getting released from the confinements of this prison walls and bars in 264 or 263 days and I want to be able to come back and help these brothers that are still going to be locked in the Iron Lodge for some long time.

Well, sir, if at all possible could my information be passed on to another to elder who could help me. It would be greatly appreciated. Thank you for your time on this.

Best gifts for kids

BY KARI DARON
Preventionist Southern Hills Alcohol and Drug Hot Springs, S.D.

It's easy to believe that giving things to kids will make them love you more or want to obey you more, but the truth is kids don't need "things" nearly as much as they need their parents' love and attention!

A parent's undivided attention, even for a short period of time each day, is the best gift kids can get! The other part of that gift is having parents who talk to and ask questions of their kids! It shows kids that their parents care and are interested in their lives. Every kid needs to know that!

These days, most parents would be startled, if not shocked, to see the pressure our teens are under at school to look perfect, do what everyone else is doing, be like the roll models on MTV and the movies; drink, smoke, do drugs, have sex, etc.

Teens are constantly being tempted and the peer pressure is fierce at times. Teens are not emotionally mature enough to know how to deal with all that's thrown at them every day.

They need the guidance and direction of their parents, whether they act like they do or not!

Kids may moan and groan when given guidelines, curfews, restrictions and chores, but under all the grumbling is a kid that knows he/she's loved.

The best thing you can do is talk WITH your kids… not AT them! Listen to them, put yourself in their shoes, but be the grown-up, setting guidelines and giving advice that you know will be beneficial to them in the long run. Be realistic about consequences if kids don't follow through:

The last part of the equation is follow-through! If you tell your teen to do something, tell them up front what the consequences of not doing it are, and stick to it! Don't cave in! You can also give your teen ownership of the consequences by giving him/her a choice, such as… 'You can either take out the trash before noon today or you can plan on no T.V. tonight. It's your choice!' Then, if he/she doesn't take out the trash by noon, make sure you follow through with the "no T.V." part! It will teach the kids that you mean business!

What does all this have to do with substance abuse? A lot! Parents not only have to be good role models for their kids, but they have to set up guidelines early, so kids know what to expect. They have to know that when you say something, you mean it! They have to know that they can come to you and tell you their problems and you will listen and be fair with them. They have to know that when you tell them why smoking, drinking and drugs are very bad news and that you don't want them trying any of them, they'll respect and believe you. They have to know that you won't degrade them by calling them stupid, a "royal pain" or worse!

They also have to know that when you say you will be checking up on them, calling their friends' parents whenever sleepovers and other get-togethers have been planned, or expecting them to respect curfew times, you mean what you say.

It's not a democracy and it shouldn't be. You are in charge and they need to know that up front.

Making the extra effort to quit smoking, drinking, etc. yourself only adds to the positive ways your child will respond to your rules.

The majority of kids who have gotten hooked on cigarettes, alcohol or drugs will tell you that they wish their parents had paid more attention to what they were doing and set down firm guidelines.

Talk to your kids and set up the rules early (4th to 5th grade), then stick to them!

It's the best gift you could ever give your kids!

KILI radio's broadcast voiced tribal elder's unrehearsed remarks

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I finally wrote a column last week that my Mother enjoyed. Usually, she doesn't comment on my writing and she especially doesn't want me writing anything about her. When I do that, she says, "Wan, okay, my turn to get you back." One time I was giving an interview to the tribune news and happened to make reference to my Mom and she told me son that they better not print anything about her, or she was going to go down there and raise cane. I thought that was cute, but ever since that time I respect my Mom's privacy.

I wrote about the old Rosebud Café and some of what one might expect to see if I reopened it. It was kind of a cute piece and did a lot of fantasizing as to what it might look like and some of the people who might stop by for a meal. I think I watched one of my favorite movies, "Casablanca" the night before I wrote that.

I wrote an article for Tim Giago's "Indian Education Today" on Lakota story telling and I don't want to give that away, but it was fun to do. It is one of those subjects that we kind of pay attention to, but not to any large degree. We have some rather good storytellers here on the Rosebud reservation, and it is comforting to know that the stories are being kept alive.

Speaking of elders, I attended the St. Francis New Year's eve powwow and I noticed that the crowd, the dancers and those on the committee seemed to be getting younger.

Years ago, when one attended a powwow, you could always count on the same elders to preside over the gathering. I could count on one hand the elders I saw that night, but then they may have come in later during the masquerade at midnight. I think I'm the one who is getting older, and everyone is staying at age 29.

I listened to a number of elders over the Internet on KILI 90.1 last week. It still amazes me that there are still many Lakota elders who are very expressive and can speak their mind in Lakota.

The Oglala elders were talking very spontaneously during the President Fire Thunder special council session.

No matter what the object of their concerns were, I was duly impressed that those elders would get up in front of the people and express themselves.

First of all, it is challenging to get up in front of any group, let alone a tension filled packed house. I am making the assumption that the house was packed. Second, it is even more admirable when some of the elders would speak Lakota, and then switch to English because they didn't want to offend anyone who couldn't understand Lakota. They didn't have to do that as it was their homeland and if anyone wanted to know what they were saying, they could simply ask. I wished I had recorded their unrehearsed remarks, as many were very eloquent.

Many of the elders spoke of the real Lakota people being at a disadvantage when it comes to jobs, assistance and good housing. One elder said that the 'iyeska' are like white people in that they get the best jobs and when all is said and done they go home to their nice homes. The elders and those most in need have to wait a long time for much needed services.

Another elder noted that Lakota people have an oral tradition when it came to such proceedings. Traditionally, they didn't carry all kinds of papers with them. She said that all those newspapers out there with the printed word could all blow away and Lakota people would still have their cultural knowledge to carry around.

From the broadcast, I believe that the elders present, especially those who were diabetic, were given a meal and that was a very culturally sensitive and wise thing to do. I understand it is common practice at such meetings.

I think I realized how much we need to legitimately tend to our elders. There should be a liaison that goes out everyday and assesses the needs of the elderly. They shouldn't have to be scrambling for propane or money for their electricity. As we listen to the elders, we may or may not agree with their complaints or concerns, but we certainly need to treat them with all the respect that we can muster.

I was in the outer office of the RST president's office today trying to catch a word with tribal attorney Steve Emery or Chief of Staff Michael LaPointe and one of our highly respected elders, Alice Four Horns, sat visiting with my niece, Lisa, who is one of the executive assistants.

I almost fell over when she said that at 87 years old, she got onto to the highway today in St. Francis and hitchhiked to Rosebud. It was a fairly nice day and she caught a ride to the tribal building to meet with the president.

In my mind, I was trying to figure out how to feed her and maybe give her a ride home, later, but Mondays are always so busy that I didn't follow through.

If you were to meet Alice, she would cause you to think of your own Mom and you would want to help her in any way that you could.

Anyway, I developed a new appreciation for the elders, after hearing their very articulate and sincere pleas. I think we need to continue a concerted effort to appropriate significant line item funding that is earmarked solely for them.

They are a cultural resource, just like our veterans, and we need to stop the rhetoric when it comes to using them to justify certain funding requests. The task is to deal with the elders case by case and continue with a database that will explain their current circumstances and needs.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (nagik sapa) Sicangu Lakota, is a decorated Vietnam Veteran with a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University. He resides on the Rosebud with his son Beaux and is also the proud father of Yvonne and Anthony.

Thoughts that come from the heart

Taking the time to learn how to walk for good health

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

More and more we are gaining awareness on how to take care of ourselves so we don't get diabetes and the other health problems that plague us.

As I have grown older, I started to realize that I wanted to be healthier in my late years and in order to do that, I needed to start learning how to take care of myself.

Obesity is a big issue with Natives and sometimes we tend to avoid it and accept it as part of our lifestyle on the reservation.

As young adults we work to keep a good image of ourselves and then as we reach that point in our lifes where we reach some sort of fulfillment, we grow content and let go of ourselves.

Several years ago, I realized I needed to do something to take care of my weight and to get exercise and watch my diet. It wasn't easy, and it still isn't easy.

First of all, I had to figure out a way to make myself to want to walk and get exercise, just having the desire to be healthy wasn't enough. It seems that comes with resolutions that we get that we want to lose weight, get healthier, stop addictions or other dreams and they quickly go fly out the door after we struggle with them for awhile.

Walking was something I knew I had to start doing. It's a well known fact plus just common sense that if we walk then that is a sure method to prevent diabetes, especially if it runs in the family.

At first, I had to force myself to want to walk, begining with the track at Kyle and then eventually to just walking anywhere and everywhere. I started with 20 minutes a day and then as time went on, I found I could walk up to three miles a day without huffing and puffling.

It felt good, it took some time to get my mental and emotional desire to keep doing it but eventually it became a normal part of my routine.

I still don't have it perfected, I still am overweight from where I should be but the point is that I came a long way and I am working to be healthier. In developing the stamina to do a regular exercice routine, I realized that I had to do other exercises too in order to work with other parts of my body.

By just walking, I didnt' pay attention to my upper torso and soon I was taking on the image of a buffalo, bulky on top. It took some adjusting and figuring out ways to do other exercises to fix that but in all it was a learniing process. I know I will never be to a vision I would like to be but the point is that .. I am walking and everyday I do, it means a healthier me sometime in the future.

The benefits is walking is very immense, as Hippocrates said that "walking is man's best medicine," he didn't realize that thousands of years later, new benefits of walking would be discovered daily.

What I discovered is that walking burns almost as many calories as jogging, eases back pains, prevents diabetes, slims the waist, lowers my blood pressure, reduces levels of bad cholesterol, reduces risk of heart attack, enhances stamina and energy, lessons my anxiety and tension, improves my muscle tone, reduces my appetite, increases aerobic capactiy, can be done on short bouts, slows down osteoporosis bone loss, can be done while traveling.

Walking can be done anywhere, not just in a structured daily exercise but canbe done when you visit the mall, try walking around Walmart several times, or walking to the post office or to someone's house to visit instead of driving.

Most important, visit your doctor, especially if you have any health problems.

Drink water, before, during and after your walk.

Eat well, avoid food with high fat and cholesterol.

Choose a good path to follow if you are waling outdoors. Be careful how you walk if you walk in cold weather.

If you experience any chest pains or discomforts, stop walking.

Goal setting is an important part of walking, set a goal, whether it be a short goal of just walking up and down the steps or around the house, it is a start.

A start is what counts.

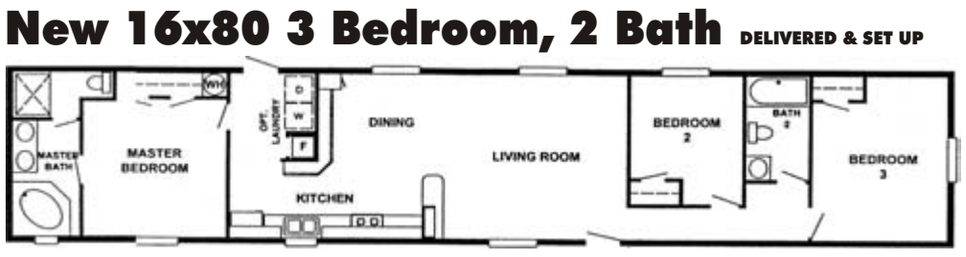
Test taking strategy and lesson planning workshp held for staff

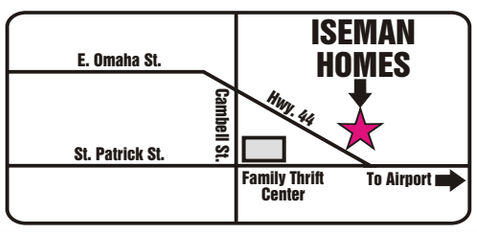
The workshop was hosted by Dan Matthews from Utah State University on Jan. 3.

The test taking strategy was based on getting the students ready for the SAT testing and/or other tests that the students need to take and explaining to the child what the expectations are from a test.



Lesson planning was to refresh the teachers on how to have their lesson planned and ready for the students so that the teacher and student will be ready to begin the subject when it's time.

Students are top priority and we have to have a plan each and every day throughout the school year so that we know and they know the teachers are ready to teach and they're ready to learn. A handout was given to each of the teaching staff and in the handouts there were examples of how correct and incorrect ways of completing a lesson plan was shown.



No Child Left Behind Act was also discussed on how schools make their Adequate Yearly Progress (AYP).

If some schools don't make the AYP then there are steps to take to make that status. There are a total of seven steps that we have read through.

Friends help elder with repairs on her home in time for Christmas

BY AMANDA TAKES WAR BONNETT
Times Editor

KYLE - Roslyn Spotted Eagle, an elder of Medicine Root District, was overwhelmed with gratitude and said she received one of her best Christmas presents ever when a group of caring people made it easier for her to stay warm during the cold winter.

The Lakota Fund staff, along with area businesses and people who wanted to help went to Spotted Eagle's mobile home, east of Kyle, on Friday, Dec. 23 and fixed her home so she could have a warm home, which meant, repairing her furnace, a new stove, getting her electrical outlets fixed, water pipes repaired, the skirting on her trailer repaired and installed her front door.

Last year during Christmas, Lakota Fund begin their adopt a family for Christmas project, by helping Fern Garrett and her children with a nice vehicle. This year, they chose to help a local entrepreneur Spotted Eagle fix her home, said Kathy Stover of the Lakota Fund.

Spotted Eagle has been a client of Lakota Fund since 1991 when she said she had attended their small business courses, enabling her to borrow money to purchase the materials she needed to get her quilting, beading and crafts business started. Since that time she has been one of their entrepreneurs.

Two years ago, Spotted Eagle's furnace stopped working and she couldn't get it repaired. She then used electric heaters but eventually her electrical outlets stopped working. Heat then came from her cook stove, then her oven soon wore out and she was down to three burners on her stove, when Lakota Fund found out they decided to surprise her with a repair package they put together from donations from various individuals and businesses which included some monetary and mostly labor and parts.

Surprised she was, Spotted Eagle said, "It was a surprise. I wasn't even ready for it." She said they told her someone was coming to look at the furnace. "It is the best Christmas present I got, I just cried, I was sitting at the table, doing a puzzle when Kathy opened the door and I went outside and they had cameras out there." She said workers came and put in a different stove, fixed her furnace, fixed her water pipes, redid her electrical outlets and repaired the skirting on her trailer.

Kathy Stover (left) of Lakota Fund helped coordinate the efforts to repair the furnace and others parts of the home of Roselyn Spotted Eagle. The event was a surprise gift for Spotted Eagle. The Christmas tree cake was a part of the surprise also. Photo courtesy of Stephanie Sorbel.

"I want to thank all the workers that helped me out, the Lakota Fund and the businesses that donated," Spotted Eagle said.

Butch Ceplecha of Butch's Heating and Cooling of Martin repaired the furnace, Duane Babby of Babby's Well Drilling worked on her water; George Freeman of Dakota Electric replaced the electrical wiring; Karlene Hunter of Lakota Express, donated a stove which Raphael and Theresa Mendoza of La Oyate helped put in the stove; Rusty Puckett and Kathy Stover of Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort and Medicine Root Development donated the labor to repair the skirting and put in a door Spotted Eagle received some time ago.

Other donations came from Avery (Joe) & Liz May of Kyle Grocery, Bob and Billi Hornbeck of Bob's Video, Angie and Jesse Reyes of La India Bonita Burrito, Kim Carlbom of Cellular One, Karlene Hunter & Mark Tilsen of Lakota Express, Steve Fredricks, Arie Shiroma of Earth Study, Michael and Kaylee Utter of Rural Community Innovations (RCI), Ross Olson of Modern Movers, Staff of The Lakota Fund and its programs: Wawokiya Business Institute, Oyate Waobleza Ititpi Project and Eagle Nest Homes.

Insulin resistance: your wake-up call for life

BY NATASHA D. BORDEAUX
Rosebud Sioux Tribe Diabetes Prevention Program
Public Relations Specialist

ROSEBUD - Insulin Resistance -- it's one of those new, 50-cent buzz words that health professionals seem to throw around a lot lately.

But what does it mean and why is it important to your health?

With the steep rise in number of overweight and obese in our population, more and more are being diagnosed as insulin resistant.

Knowing you are insulin resistant is important because that information gives you the power to prevent the consequences of insulin resistance -- which can be development of cardiac disease, type 2 diabetes, a shortening of your life span and lowering of the quality of your life.

Knowing you are insulin resistant puts your health and future back in your hands. If you decide to do nothing about your health once you are diagnosed, you do so with the full knowledge that you are sentencing yourself to a life of debilitation and disease.

If you decide to accept the challenge of improving your health, you can look forward to a healthy and long life, since it is well-known that insulin resistance CAN be reversed!

The first step to doing so is learning about what insulin resistance is and what causes it.

What exactly is Insulin Resistance?

First and foremost, Insulin Resistance IS NOT the same thing as type 2 diabetes. While people with type 2 diabetes may have insulin resistance, it does not mean that all people with insulin resistance have diabetes.

In fact, science has not yet determined why some people with insulin resistance eventually develop diabetes and others do not. By maintaining an appropriate weight and a physically

Regional firefighters help with Oklahoma, Texas fires

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) _ Several groups of firefighters and trucks from South Dakota and Nebraska have traveled to Texas and Oklahoma to help battle major grass fires.

Jim Strain of the South Dakota Wildland Fire Suppression office in Rapid City said the crews are trained to handle grass fires, so they're well qualified.

``They're used to fighting fast-moving grass fires up here in the Great Plains and when they get down to Texas and Oklahoma, it's nothing new for them.

They're already experts at fighting grass fires,'' he said.

The teams will be in the South at least two weeks, and more people could go if conditions get worse, Strain said.

`If they feel like they need to go this far north again to pull more resources, we'll be more than happy to send more folks down south to help them out,'' he said.

Agencies taking part include the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Standing Rock and Cheyenne River tribes, Badlands National Park, Black Hills National Forest and Nebraska National Forest, Strain said.

State officials said it's unusual to send out crews this time of the year.

The last time they had to help with extreme grass fires during the winter was in 1994.

active lifestyle many individuals are able to reduce their chances of becoming insulin resistant and developing diabetes.

To understand insulin resistance, one must first understand what insulin does.

Insulin is a hormone secreted by the pancreas. It helps the body utilize blood sugar by binding with receptors on cells like a key would fit into a lock. Once the key insulin-has unlocked the door to the cell, the sugar can pass from the blood into the cell where it is used for energy or stored for future use in the form of glycogen in liver or muscle cells.

Insulin resistance occurs when the normal amount of insulin secreted by the pancreas is not able to unlock the door to cells.

To maintain normal blood sugar levels, the pancreas secretes more insulin.

In some cases (about 1/3 of the people with insulin resistance), when the body cells resist or do not respond to even high levels of insulin, glucose builds up in the blood resulting in high blood glucose or type 2 diabetes.

There are no outward physical signs of insulin resistance. A glucose tolerance test, during which insulin and blood glucose are measured, can help determine if someone is insulin resistant. Many people who are insulin resistant produce large enough quantities of insulin to maintain near normal blood glucose levels.

Even if you have tested negative for type 2 diabetes, that does not mean you are in the clear for insulin resistance. Most doctors do not test for insulin resistance unless it is requested so make sure you request a specific test for insulin resistance.

Keeping insulin resistance at bay

According to the National Diabetes Information Clearinghouse, Insulin resistance is a "silent condition that increases the chances of developing diabetes and heart disease."

Many are left wondering, "If the condition is silent, how do we keep ourselves from getting it?"

The best thing to do is to maintain a healthy weight. If you are already overweight or obese, the best thing to do is to lose a few pounds and keep them off. Even losing 10 pounds can improve your health and reduce your chances of disease.

Exercise is a great way to improve your body's use of insulin and to lose weight. Exercise makes your cells more receptive to insulin. Simple daily walking is the best way to start.

By losing weight and remaining physically active (with 30 minutes/day, 5 days/week of heart-raising exercise) you can avoid developing type 2 diabetes and even reverse the effects of insulin resistance.

You should maintain a diet low in fat and concentrated sweets.

Avoid foods like French fries, onion rings, candy, slushees, donuts and other high-sugar snacks. Things like sausage and pepperoni pizza, cheeseburgers, and fast foods should be eaten in small amounts and then, only on occasion.

Other recommendations are to stop smoking and to drink alcohol in moderation (1 drink per day for women, 1 to 2 per day for men).

Your Wake-up Call

If you are diagnosed with insulin resistance, think of it as your wake-up call. If you do nothing, chances are you may develop heart disease and type 2 diabetes as well as all the debilitating complications that go along with those diseases.

The good news is you can turn it all around starting now. Start a light exercise routine. Even a simple walk around the block can get you started in the right direction.

Make one small change in your diet and stick with it. Start by not drinking pop, or by switching to diet. Increase your water intake to at least 8 glasses per day.

If you don't drink pop then start by cutting fried or high-sugar foods from your diet. Remember to replace them with high-fiber, healthy foods like veggies, fruits and whole grains. Foods like oatmeal, brown rice, whole-wheat bread (make sure the first ingredient is 100% whole wheat flour) and whole-wheat pastas are easy substitutes.

Try to maintain your one dietary change until it becomes a habit.

Then slowly add one more change, like reducing your portion sizes or eating the recommended amount of fruits and vegetables. Maintain each change until it becomes second nature.

Remember your goal is not to simply lose weight, rather it is to make lifestyle changes that you maintain for the rest of your life.

When making healthy lifestyle changes the best advice is to seek help and support. Talk to your family and friends and enlist their support. Seek out someone who may have lost weight or who has already established a healthy routine and ask for guidance, chances are they will be glad to help. Also start reading healthy magazines like Self, Prevention, Healthy Woman, or Healthy Man and Cooking Light for ideas and inspiration.

Talk with your doctor and ask for recommendations and a referral to a dietician.

The RST Diabetes Prevention Program offers a free exercise facility and personal training services to all who wish to utilize their services.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna:

Happy new year and lots of luck for you.I used to live near Pine Ridge struggled a lot to be in the area as I love the Lakota people.

I moved a year ago to the the western part of the country, but my heart still in South Dakota. I know I have to keep my journey and I have this strong call to actually keep going and acomplish what I really came here to do, I mean what is my reason to be on this planet? Right now I am confused. I have no job and this urge to put in practice what I have been studying and working on, but fearing what is going to come next.

I wish all the best,

Seeker

Dear Seeker:

Your prayers have been heard so that your future as a "giver" is being arranged. There is much self-healing to come first however, so you are being given this time to complete your own personal emotional, spiritual, and physical healing. Trusting yourself to have made and make the right decisions for your future is your first step. Trusting that the doors of opportunity will open in accordance with the highest good of all is your second step. I have emailed you my cell phone number so that we may talk. Please call me. You will be returning to South Dakota in a while to refresh and restart your personal journey.

Dear Anna:

I really enjoy reading your column in the newspaper. Okay where do I start? I have three wonderful children and a supportive family. My boyfriend and I have been going with each other for over a year now. I trust him completely, but lately he's been going to Rapid City and I want to know if he's cheating on me or not.

Also my uncle has just recently returned home from the drug world and I thinks it is the drugs that make him talk the way he does. I have seen him and he was acting crazy and talking out of his mind will he ever be normal and will my life be better then it is now? Thanks for your time.

Is He Cheating?

Dear Is He Cheating?

I hate that question so let me reflect it back to you: what besides going to Rapid City would make you question his loyalty, especially since you say you trust him completely? Obviously, you don't trust him completely - although you want to. I really feel that this is more of a question of being and feeling "left out."

The one thing that is true is that this man is not ready for marriage and all that goes with it. He still feels a need to party-down with his friends without you on occassion. I know this much, and it's not even psychic: any relationship is most certainly doomed for failure if it involves too much separation in social and spiritual lives. When two people are together and either one or both of them focus on their own amusement more than they focus on the feelings of their partner it's on its way to being over. It is also a sign of vast emotional immaturity. Partying as a focus beyond high school is a symptom of immaturity.

Your uncle is confused and it is the direct result of drug use. He may require a visit to a mental health professional and some medication to begin to get his "brain" back. He is paranoid and what happened to him is a direct result of a chemical "burn" within his brain. The thought process within him feels to him that it has vastly sped up, and this results in too much sensory in-put. What happens is that things that are in subtle reference in our normal world become excited and exagerated in the altered brain. If he will not go to mental health for treatment, then encourage him to drink a lot of soda pop for awhile. The sodium within it is similar to lithium (in effect) and can help ease his paranoia.

He will eventually be all right, a little strange (but then who isn't?) but okay. It will take at least two years for him to find some balance. Hopefully, his journey may serve to help somebody who is about to take the meth road will read this letter and stop - because they value their brain and want to have one in the future.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868 @ gwtc.net or fax to (605) 455-1870, or write to PO Box 406, Kyle, S.D. 57750. Clearly mark Ask Anna on your request. This column is meant for entertainment purposes only.

RST council seeks investigation of past mismanagement of hospital

Creating millions of dollars of debt

CEO provides regular report to council

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The Rosebud Sioux tribal council met in a regular monthly session on Jan. 11 and took action on several agenda items, including a regular update on the Rosebud Hospital's progress in making administrative, patient care and fiscal improvements. It was the hospital's January 2006 report to the council. The tribal council passed resolution 06-04 which calls for an investigation of the Rosebud I.H.S. hospital by the Inspector General during the hospital's previous administrations in which there was a severe budget shortfall.

The resolution read, in part; "Whereas I.H.S. has mismanaged funding up to the year 2005, creating millions of dollars in debt, which resulted in cutbacks in already underfunded programs." The apparent deficit caused many local concerns and rumors about the hospital's contract health program, patient care, and ability to serve Sicangu people in the long term.

Eli Wicks from Senator Tim Johnson's office was present during the afternoon session. When asked by Antelope council representative, Robert Moore, what form the request for investigation should take, she said that the Senator's office did not have the authority to conduct an investigation, but that the request should go to the Inspector General. She also

Gaming to be impacted by Department of Justice

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

WASHINGTON - Last September the Department of Justice unveiled a proposal which is proving controversial in Indian Country. The Department of Justice is proposing to clarify the difference between Class II gaming and Class III games which refer to slot machines.

It seeks to punish tribes if they offer Class II gaming devices that resemble slot machine and do not fit into new proposed standards. In the past, the Department of Justice has lost all of its bids to challenge tribes in court over machines that the National Indian Gaming determined were Class II machines. Class II games are primarily bingo games.

In October 2005, the DOJ and the NIGC, despite their differences, were to hold joint consultations with tribes at two locations in Oklahoma and Florida in November. Phil Hogen, Chairman of the NIGC was quoted as saying that NIGC had plenty of input into the proposal; however he had not seen the final version.

Some see the proposal as an attempt to limit machine numbers and subject them to state control, while essentially forcing more revenue sharing with states.

The proposal which will be presented to both the House and Senate judiciary committees was

Group raising money to buy land around Bear Butte

RAPID CITY - After years of concern, a Bear Butte Land Trust Fund was opened at Wells Fargo Bank by a volunteer group, Defenders of the Black Hills.

The idea was triggered by the encroaching development upon the sacred mountain, Bear Butte. People from more than 60 Native American tribes from the North American continent travel to Bear Butte on a yearly basis to conduct prayer ceremonies. The encroaching development is begin to disturb the peace and quiet that is necessary for the ceremonies.

A land trust fund was seen as the only permanent solution to stopping the selling of land surrounding the small sacred mountain. The organization was able to stop the building of an outdoor shooting range that was planned for four miles north of the Butte. A private operator is planning on building a biker bar and outdoor concert arena just one and a half miles from the base of the mountain.

Since many people want to help protect the land surrounding Bear Butte, the organization decided that opening a land trust fund would allow everyone the opportunity to do fund raising events and contribute to the fund. The price of the land surrounding the Butte is high as realtors use the sacred mountain in their advertisements.

The organization recently received their designation as a tax-exempt non-profit organization capable of receiving gifts and donations.

They work on environmental and sacred site issues in the Midwest with no paid staff.

Donations to the Bear Butte Land Trust Fund may be sent to Wells Fargo Bank, 825 St. Joseph St., Rapid City, SD 57701.

Bank transfers are also available by contacting any Wells Fargo Bank.

Rosebud is not prepared for winter weather disaster

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

MISSION - The very intense and bitter cold winter weather in December impacted almost half of the Rosebud Sioux population in one way or another, according to Bryan Herman, who is the volunteer RST Director of the Emergency Preparedness Program and the Todd County Emergency Manager. Herman said the major storms in December caught many people off guard who should have been prepared. Fortunately the program was provided tribal funds to distribute enough propane and wood to those who needed it most.

Bryan Herman

The Rosebud is not fully prepared to tackle winter weather, which could result in many people being without food and heat, according to Herman. That fact makes his volunteer work in emergency preparedness all the more crucial to the public health of the people.

RST has a "Disaster Relief Operations" manual, which was written in 1984 and last revised in 1995. Much of the personnel and addresses have changed, but the procedures are still relevant and followed. The manual outlines the purposes and priorities of disaster relief and spells out the process and administrative duties of each entity involved. Herman says the plan definitely needs to be updated, but time has not yet allowed this to happen. The RST Council would also have to review it and give approval.

The program is one that should be funded to a significant degree, as it is a legitimate entity that should be visible at all times, not just during disaster situations. Although the Council does provide funding for wood, propane, emergency shelter, etc., it is on a case by case basis and a permanent budget is not in place. If funding runs out, Herman says he must go before the Budget and Finance committee for approval. Herman noted that it is important for the Tribal Council to understand the significance of the Emergency Preparedness Program. He would like to see it be a full time, paid position. "There just aren't enough hours in the day to accomplish everything needed to make this program run smoothly," said Herman. All volunteers of the program hold full time labeled as a 'criminal' bill since it will be reviewed by the judiciary committees.

The Department of Justice is closing hearing on the proposal after just three meeting and it will be sponsored as bill in March or April. Some have accused the administration of playing politics with the proposal as it would hurt the $19 billion Indian gaming industry.

Written comments can still be sent to the Office of Tribal Justice until Jan. 31, Attention: Johnson Act Tribal Consultation, Room 2318, Main Justice Building, 930 Pennsylvania Ave NW, Washington, DC, 20530 or e-mailed to tribalconsultation@usdoj.gov.

After the consultations were held in Tulsa, Oka. and in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. a large number of tribal people submitted comments about the proposal. Government officials said that holding consultations with each tribe was not practical and that it would not be holding any more sessions.

The government is insisting that the legislation will help to clarify the difference between Class II and Class III gaming. Some Class II machines could be moved to Class III and the tribe would have get rid of them within a year or negotiate a compact with the state, otherwise it would face punitive measures by the DOJ.

If there is a positive side to this proposed action, it is that the whole issue was prompted by hearings sponsored last April by Senator John McCain (R-AZ) who is the Chairman of the Senate Indian Affairs Committee. McCain represents many tribes in his home state of Arizona.

The Navajo Times recently reported that the Peabody Western Coal company is closing down its Black Mesa Mine and this will cost the tribe $13 million in royalties and taxes. Chairman Joe Shirley, Jr. may be looking at Indian gaming as a way to replace the lost income. At present, the Navajo Nation does not have any gaming compacts with any of the surrounding states.

The state of Kansas is looking seriously at building a world class casino and at this point it is not clear whether the state will do it, or if it will be located on Indian land, according to the Joplin Globe. Governor Kathleen Sebelius is looking at gaming as a way to generate more revenue, especially for education. The legislature apparently has been opposed to more gambling in the state; however the need for revenue might tip the scale in favor of more gaming. The Potowatomi, Kickapoo, and the Sac and Fox stand to gain if the state allows more Indian gaming compacts.

Not everyone is excited about the prospect of generating more income through gaming. The Lansing State Journal is reporting that U.S. Representative Mike Rogers is in favor of a two moratorium nationwide on new Indian casinos. He said that in the wake of recent scandals, new procedures are needed to govern the opening of new Indian casinos.

informed the tribal council that any special appropriations requests should be submitted to Senator Johnson's office by early February, so that he could include them in his request.

Shelly Harris, the CEO of the Rosebud Comprehensive Healthcare Facility provided a verbal and written report of the hospital's progress in implementing several effective changes that appear to be bringing patients back for services, increasing third party billing income, and filling vacant positions vital to good service delivery.

Harris spoke of a patient satisfaction survey that will be administered soon. Meanwhile, the successful urgent care program will be moved to the clinic area. The urgent care program has been a novel and highly effective way to meet the health care needs of patients who go to the hospital with a health issue that is not life threatening, but needs attention. Patients have regularly gone to the hospital's emergency room with routine problems and this has diverted time and resources from patients who are truly in need of immediate care. The number of patients for October fiscal year 2006 seen in the urgent care section was 848 patients.

The waiting time in the past for health care at the hospital, in the past, has been the subject of discussion among patients who need care. Often times, patients find themselves waiting for hours to be seen, while others simply refuse to wait. The urgent care program appears to have greatly cut down the wait time.

The Rosebud Hospital is going to cooperate with the I.H.S. Area Office in working to reduce the accrued 2005 fiscal year debt. The Area Office has access to a possible $500 thousand to $1 million dollars to assist the hospital in reducing the debt from 2005. This manner in which this will be accomplished will addressed in an operating and recovery plan to be submitted as soon as possible.

Harris noted that there is more work to do in filling vacancies at the facility; however positions in contract health, the business office and medical records have been filled. A fund status report which details the hospital's budget and plan of correction with target completion dates is referenced in the written report. She said that CMS did the initial review of the hospital and required a report each Friday. They have seen a great deal of improvement at the hospital, however, they may return for a follow-up visit.

Harris then discussed staffing at the hospital and said that there is an eighty percent occupancy rate of available positions. There are 269 positions and 216 have been filled. She says that the task of filling available nursing vacancies is going well and that many nurses are calling. A human resources specialist position is being advertised with a closing date of January 15. Harris said that she was going to invite the council or the RST health board to help in selecting candidates. A recruitment and retention committee has been initiated with the express purpose of hiring and retaining qualified personnel, according to the report.

In terms of patients utilizing the hospital, the report notes that, "As of January 6, 2006 there are 29,758 registered living patients and 6,051 active users. There have been 7, 113 visits documented from October 1, 2005 through November 7, 2005."

Harris also spoke of the need for immediate on-site information technology support. Many of the computers need upgrading and at least one IT specialist and one IT technician are needed.

The I.H.S. headquarters is apparently working with the Rosebud Hospital to fund an OB/GYN specialist and will employ Harvard educated, Dr. Sue Treadwell. She will assist the hospital beginning in April to help create an OB/GYN Center of Excellence at Rosebud. Dr. Treadwell will also assist in the recruitment of highly qualified personnel, as well as training nursing and radiology staff in performing OB ultrasounds, according the report.

Another positive development at the hospital has been the contracting with Data Track in order to do outpatient billing. The report says, "Several areas within our business cycle have been reviewed, problems identified and action taken to maximize our collections."

Finally, the written report provides a graph which illustrates the amount of third party revenue collected from fiscal year 2001 to 2006. For January of 2006, $1 million dollars has already been collected, while a projected figure of well over $8 million is the target amount that may be collected during the current year.

The current administrative efforts to correct past deficiencies at the Rosebud Hospital and bring back quality health care to the Sicangu people appear to be progressing well. The patient satisfaction survey that will be administered in the near future will aid management in further refining and implementing new changes that will ultimately result in good patient care and satisfaction. Harris noted the need to keep the tribal membership informed of new changes, schedules, and times so that patients can take advantage of the hospital's services.

employment in other tribal departments and have families. "It gets tough. Something's got to give and unfortunately this program takes a back seat."

There are approximately ten people who Herman says he can count on and who are ready to assist on a volunteer basis no matter what the disaster is. Denise Dunham of RST Water Resources is vital to the effort as she attends to the clerical and administrative functions of the program. Herman says he also relies on Nick Elk Looks Back of the Department of Natural Resources since Nick and his crew know the entire reservation so well. Help also comes to the program via Law Enforcement Services, Emergency Medical Services, the area fire departments and a few key figures at Water Resources such as Chet Herman, Sr. "These people are there when I need them. They like helping the people and being in the midst of things. I sincerely thank them for their efforts." Herman said he was also pleased that RST President Rodney M. Bordeaux was present at the command center during one of the storms to observe the process. It was the first time since Herman became involved with the EPP that a Tribal President had put forth that effort

Herman has worked closely with Homeland Security, the National Weather Service and the State of South Dakota and forged friendships, which make his work more enjoyable. Says Herman, "If a disaster happens, I'm on the phone with the state."

In fact, some of the Homeland Security grant funds have provided security cameras at Todd County High School, as well as equipment for the local law enforcement agencies, fire departments, and ambulance service. Such things as thermal cameras, binoculars, chemical suits, underwater cameras, digital radios, and related equipment have been purchased with these funds. Partial funding from FEMA, the State, and Tribe was responsible for replacing the Okreek Community Center after it was destroyed by fire during an electrical storm.

Herman's vision for the Rosebud is to have storm shelters in every community that are stocked with food, water, and backup generators. He would also like to have a warning siren placed in each community. It is vital that supplies be located where they are easily accessible.

A first step to achieving this goal was by training Community Emergency Response Teams or CERT. The first such training was held, ironically, on September 11, 2001. Just when many emergency responders, trainers and FEMA personnel were present for a meeting on the campus of SGU, the attack on the World Trade Center occurred. It was a day that Herman will have imprinted on his mind for a long time given his commitment to emergency preparedness.

Herman is highly qualified in emergency preparedness as he has been in the business for many years.

He has served on the Mission Volunteer Fire Department since 1986, but has not been involved in actual fire fighting since taking over the EPP. He is trained in fire fighting, hazmat, CPR, first responder, and is a Red Cross volunteer.

Bryan Herman 's easy manner and great track record has made him a good choice to follow in the footsteps of Bill Long, who left a legacy in emergency response.

Herman's commitment to the people of the Rosebud is deserving of much recognition as he has served as one of the nation's "bravest" and continues to demonstrate his dedication.

Headstart-up and operating but dealing with facilities, staff and transportation

BY TOM CRASH
Time's Correspondent

PIYA WICONI - "We are up and running," said Shawna Pourier, Headstart director for the new Oglala Lakota College Head start program, "that doesn't mean we don't have growing pains, we need financial resources to help fix some facilities, we need to add some staff, deal with training and as always in a reservation wide program, you have to deal with transportation."

Currently, the OLC Headstart is operating early Headstarts in Kyle, Pine Ridge, Porcupine, Manderson and Oglala and Headstart centers in Oglala (1), Pine Ridge (9), Wakpamni, Wounded Knee (2), Martin (2), Manderson (2), Allen, Red Shirt, Wanblee (2) and Porcupine (2). According to Pourier, OLC had to close the Calico center due to a combination of problems including the facility, staffing, enrollment and transportation.

"We really have nothing in the current budget to deal with facilities and we are trying to do a budget modification," said Pourier, "we need a new roof immediately on the Pine Ridge building that houses nine centers and a number of the other centers need work."

Originally, the Porcupine center was to be completed by the end of October but it is already the middle of January and Porcupine Headstart I and II are doing half day sessions because they don't have the room. According to Harry Eagle Bull, coordinator for the tribe's education committee, Joe Locust has been assigned to coordinate the completion of the project which was a joint Headstart and OST Child Care project from last year.

"They told me that maybe next week the building will be done," said Eagle Bull, "but I think it will be the end of the month or the first week of February before it is completed and the final inspection has taken place."

The original contract funded OLC for 531 children in Headstart and 100 in Early Headstart.

Today, vacancies with Headstart include a teacher in Oglala, a cook in Wanblee and four bus drivers, two in Porcupine, one in Porcupine and one in Wounded Knee.

Those interested need to complete an Oglala Lakota College application, complete a background check with public safety and a physical with a TB skin test and be ready to pass a drug test.

"We also need subs across the reservation, for each center so we have people ready to step in if someone is sick or has a death in the family," added Pourier, "and in looking ahead we need to still deal with the curriculum, additional training and having every teacher and assistant working on a CDA or a bachelors degree."

RST council seeks investigation of past mismanagement of hospital

Creating millions of dollars of debt

CEO provides regular report to council

Time's Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The Rosebud Sioux tribal council met in a regular monthly session on Jan. 11 and took action on several agenda items, including a regular update on the Rosebud Hospital's progress in making administrative, patient care and fiscal improvements. It was the hospital's January 2006 report to the council. The tribal council passed resolution 06-04 which calls for an investigation of the Rosebud I.H.S. hospital by the Inspector General during the hospital's previous administrations in which there was a severe budget shortfall.

With the new administration in place, the Rosebud I.H.S. is making positive gains in patient care and third party collections.

The resolution read, in part; "Whereas I.H.S. has mismanaged funding up to the year 2005, creating millions of dollars in debt, which resulted in cutbacks in already underfunded programs." The apparent deficit caused many local concerns and rumors about the hospital's contract health program, patient care, and ability to serve Sicangu people in the long term.

Eli Wicks from Senator Tim Johnson's office was present during the afternoon session. When asked by Antelope council representative, Robert Moore, what form the request for investigation should take, she said that the Senator's office did not have the authority to conduct an investigation, but that the request should go to the Inspector General. The Area Office has access to a possible $500 thousand to $1 million dollars to assist the hospital in reducing the debt from 2005. This manner in which this will be accomplished will addressed in an operating and recovery plan to be submitted as soon as possible.

Harris noted that there is more work to do in filling vacancies at the facility; however positions in contract health, the business office and medical records have been filled. A fund status report which details the hospital's budget and plan of correction with target completion dates is referenced in the written report. She said that CMS did the initial review of the hospital and required a report each Friday. They have seen a great deal of improvement at the hospital, however, they may return for a follow-up visit.

Harris then discussed staffing at the hospital and said that there is an eighty percent occupancy rate of available positions. There are 269 positions and 216 have been filled. She says that the task of filling available nursing vacancies is going well and that many nurses are calling. A human resources specialist position is being advertised with a closing date of January 15. Harris said that she was going to invite the council or the RST health board to help in selecting candidates. A recruitment and retention committee has been initiated with the express purpose of hiring and retaining qualified personnel, according to the report.

In terms of patients utilizing the hospital, the report notes that, "As of January 6, 2006 there are 29,758 registered living patients and 6,051 active users. There have been 7, 113 visits documented from October 1, 2005 through November 7, 2005."

Harris also spoke of the need for immediate on-site information technology support. Many of the computers need upgrading and at least one IT specialist and one IT technician are needed.

The I.H.S. headquarters is apparently working with the Rosebud Hospital to fund an OB/GYN specialist and will employ Harvard educated, Dr. Sue Treadwell. She will assist the hospital beginning in April to help create an OB/GYN Center of Excellence at Rosebud. Dr. Treadwell will also assist in the recruitment of highly qualified personnel, as well as training nursing and radiology staff in performing OB ultrasounds, according the report.

Another positive development at the hospital has been the contracting with Data Track in order to do outpatient billing. The report says, "Several areas within our business cycle have been reviewed, problems identified and action taken to maximize our collections."

Finally, the written report provides a graph which illustrates the amount of third party revenue collected from fiscal year 2001 to 2006. For January of 2006, $1 million dollars has already been collected, while a projected figure of well over $8 million is the target amount that may be collected during the current year.

The current administrative efforts to correct past deficiencies at the Rosebud Hospital and bring back quality health care to the Sicangu people appear to be progressing well. The patient satisfaction survey that will be administered in the near future will aid management in further refining and implementing new changes that will ultimately result in good patient care and satisfaction. Harris noted the need to keep the tribal membership informed of new changes, schedules, and times so that patients can take advantage of the hospital's services.

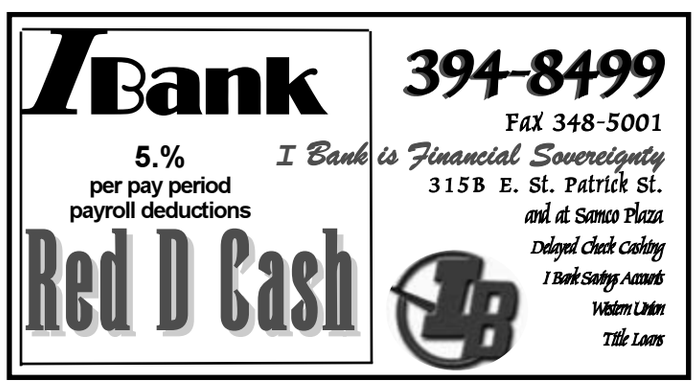
Headstart-up and operating but dealing with facilities, staff and transportation



PIYA WICONI - "We are up and running," said Shawna Pourier, Headstart director for the new Oglala Lakota College Head start program, "that doesn't mean we don't have growing pains, we need financial resources to help fix some facilities, we need to add some staff, deal with training and as always in a reservation wide program, you have to deal with transportation."

Currently, the OLC Headstart is operating early Headstarts in Kyle, Pine Ridge, Porcupine, Manderson and Oglala and Headstart centers in Oglala (1), Pine Ridge (9), Wakpamni, Wounded Knee (2), Martin (2), Manderson (2), Allen, Red Shirt, Wanblee (2) and Porcupine (2). According to Pourier, OLC had to close the Calico center due to a combination of problems including the facility, staffing, enrollment and transportation.

"We really have nothing in the current budget to deal with facilities and we are trying to do a budget modification," said Pourier, "we need a new roof immediately on the Pine Ridge building that houses nine centers and a number of the other centers need work."

Originally, the Porcupine center was to be completed by the end of October but it is already the middle of January and Porcupine Headstart I and II are doing half day sessions because they don't not have the room. According to Harry Eagle Bull, coordinator for the tribe's education committee, Joe Locust has been assigned to coordinate the completion of the project which was a joint Headstart and OST Child Care project from last year.

"They told me that maybe next week the building will be done," said Eagle Bull,

ST. FRANCIS - "It was our first home game and the crowd was really into it , we couldn't miss as we hit 17 threes and played everyone on our bench," said Roger Crow Eagle, St. Francis coach when asked about his team's 135-62 win over Bennett County, "the crowd was really excited to see our team and we just had to put our best game out there."

After a 82-53 loss to White River on the road with Louie Krogman burning the nets for 40 points, the Warriors have put together four straight wins, most recently a 53-49 come from behind win Monday night over Cheyenne Eagle Butte. Add a 61-46 win over Crow Creek and a 75-65 win over Todd County during the Rosebud Shootout.

JJ Arcoren led the way last night with 27 points against Eagle Butte and was helped by Kris Leroy who chipped in 11 points. Arcoren also led St. Francis over Bennett County with 28 points as five Warriors hit double figures.

Keisha Brewer on the inside and Webber on the outside both hit for 16 points to lead the way, Big Crow added 10 as Pine Ridge was too much for Wall to handle both inside and outside. "Bulldawg" named outstanding tournament wrestler for third time

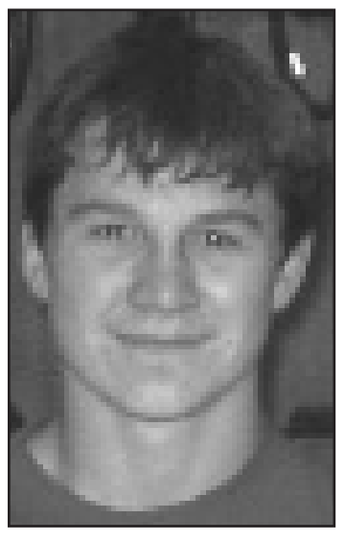
Lyman added to Lakota Nation and Crawford honors

BY TOM CRASH
Time's Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - Dave "Bulldawg" Michaud, a junior at Pine Ridge, won the Mid-Dakota Monster Lyman Invitational 171 pound division with a decision over Rio Reeves of Stanley County in the championship match. Michaud opened the tourney in Presho with pins in his first two matches, 1:24 over Chase Hill of Sully Buttes and a fall in 1:21 over Dustin Gould of Lead-Deadwood and cleared the semis with a decision over Nick Lopez of Hot Springs. Michaud was selected the Outstanding Wrestler of the tournament.



Both Trevor Jacobs and Bulldawg earned two outstanding tourney honors last year," said Dave Michaud, Pine Ridge wrestling coach, "after LNI and Crawford, this is his third tournament honor of the year, he has set a new standard for Pine Ridge wrestlers."

Hot Springs took the team title with 250.5 points, Stanley County was second with 233.5 and Philip was third with 205.5 while Todd County was 12th with 66.5 and Pine Ridge was 14th with 60.

Cheyenne Eagle Butte-Faith finished in a tie for 18th with 30 and Red Cloud and Little Wound tied for 22nd place.

Chris Rahn/Todd County took fourth in 275/HWT, Ty Hale/Faith-CEB was 4th in 125, Charles Janis/Pine Ridge was 5th in 275 while Kellie Pulliam/Pine Ridge was 6th in 140.

After looking over the competition at the Bennett County Invitational in Martin on Saturday, Michaud decided to move up two weight classes to 215; it did not matter as Bulldawg pinned Mark Calburn of Valentine in 5:56 for the championship, moving his season record to 22-1. Currently, Michaud is ranked number two in Class A at 171 pounds behind Andy Johnson/Yankton who is the defending 171 champ. Michaud took second at 160 last year as a sophomore.

Winner JV won the Bennett County Invitational 160 to 146.5 over the host Bennett County team. Rapid City Central JV were third, Valentine JV took 4th and Pine Ridge was fifth with 95; Todd County was 6th with 85.5, Red Cloud was 9th with 80 and Little Wound took 11th.

"At the beginning of the year, I would have said we would have been in the running to win the team title," said Dave Michaud, "but we had three of our senior wrestlers drop out of the program, JD Two Bulls, Travis Red Owl and Phil Rowland, all state qualifiers from last year."

Red Cloud's Catlin Clifford pinned Jacob McClure of Hill City in 1:40 to win the 140 division, Tanner O'Daniel took second in 103, Andrew Twiss took fourth in 189 and Darrin Merrival took second in 189.

Todd County had three winners as Jarret Allen won at 119, Albert Hert Many Horses took the 125 and Chris Rahn won the 275 division while Jim Colombe took third at 215 and Cody Short Bull was fourth at 130.

In addition to Michaud for Pine Ridge, Kellie Pulliam won the 135 pound division, Charles Janis took second at 275, Tex Wells was second at 171 and Bruce Jacobs was fourth at 112.

Next up for the area wrestlers is the Winner Invitational on Jan. 21st and Red Cloud's Invitational on the 28th.

'Double-double' Big Crow leads Williston State at conference play begins

WILLISTON, N. Dak. - Following a long holiday break from school which included three games in Arizona, the Williston State Lady Tetons opened Mon-DAK conference play with two strong wins with Pine Ridge's Laura Big Crow leading the way hitting double-doubles in their last three games, the last two were conference wins, 66-62 over North Dakota State College of Science and 85-58 over Minot State University-Bottineau.

Down 12-8 early in the game against MSU-Bottineau, Thursday at home in Williston, Big Crow scored seven straight points to help her team to a 15-12 lead. Big Crow picked up three quick fouls in the first half and spent some time on the bench but came out in the second half to hit a quick bucket and help her team pick up their second straight conference win. For the third straight game, Laura finished with a double-double, hitting for 17 points and grabbing 13 rebounds.

Normally pounding it into Big Crow, the Lady Tetons took advantage of a hot outside game, hitting 12 threes while Lacy Heiar hit five threes and led the team with 27 points, Tate Locust chipped in two points in the win. The Lady Tetons upped their season record to 13-4 and 2-0 in conference play.

Williston State opened their conference play on Friday, Jan. 6th in Wahpeton and came out with a hard fought 66-62 win.

The Pine Ridge connection provided a one-two punch as Big Crow scored 20 points and added 11 boards and Tate Locust chipped in nine points hitting on four of six from the field. Williston won each half with a balanced attack, scoring from the perimeter and from down in the paint.

Williston State finished off their three game holiday tourney in Scottsdale, Ariz. at the end of December with a tough loss to Mesa Community College 77-72 despite Laura Big Crow's 33 points and 13 rebounds.

Mesa held a 34-30 lead at the end of the first half and the Lady Tetons couldn't close the gap even with Big Crow's super game; turnovers spelled the difference as Williston turned the ball over 25 times compared to just 12 for Mesa.

Williston heads for Bismarck this week taking on Bismarck State on Thursday evening and United Tribes on Friday night. Big Crow is averaging 24.5 points and 10 rebounds per game which puts her among the leaders of the conference and also in the National Junior College Athletic Association which has generated a lot of interest from four year schools around the country.

Tribal politics: How fear is involved in not knowing

The age old questions and concerns that tribal members often speak about with much intensity and conviction have to do with 'communication' more than anything else. Through out our modern history, our tribal government has entered into contracts and agreements which have prompted debate and discussion.

Surely there were business transactions and initiatives which made tribal members uneasy and agitated in past administrations. Many times, the people had no say or no control over the events that impacted the tribe, and yet there did not seem to a lot of outcry.

For the Lakota tribes along the Missouri, the federal government and the state has had incursions which had tribal members up in arms, but it still never changed the eventual course of history which resulted in Lakota lands being taken.

During the Rosebud court case, Kneip V. Rosebud Sioux Tribe, many people were probably angered, land was taken and everyone was upset but at the end result and despite their protests the matter was settled and people moved on.

On the Pine Ridge, many people are still leery and suspicious that the tribe may have put at risk tribal land in exchange for a $38 million loan package.

There is concern, it centers around fear and confusion on the loan package and tribal politics. When that is mixed with the daily basis to survive, and to worry about money it leads to fear of what is going on and what may happen in the future. People are concerned about the land base, sovereignty, about loss of money in the budgets, locally and on a national level.

It points up the need to 'communicate' with the people as to the exact nature of transactions.

Open government and good 'communication' in many forms is a good practice.

Leadership is in all parts of our tribal structure, whether it be our grass roots people, elected tribal leaders or just being a parent. And communication and information are keys to success.

Translating Lakota words that Mom used to call 'jawbreakers'

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I grew up during a time in the 1950's and 60's when people already began to discriminate against those who spoke Lakota. Many of the town kids of mixed blood heritage would invariably say something about the full blood kids who attended Todd County or the old Rosebud boarding school.

This was true especially about the kids who were bussed in from Soldier Creek or Parmelee. At that time, there were a lot of white families who lived in and around Mission town, as some people called it.

The town was bustling with a couple of bars and liquor stores and there seemed to be racial tensions among the grown ups and people passing through. This extended to the white kids who represented the last remnants of families who settled the town. There was trouble sometimes between the Lakota kids and the white kids.

My brother Harvey was bad for picking fights with white students, who might have been dependents of teachers or families from the BIA. I can remember him boxing with a teacher's son who could wrestle quite well, but couldn't box for nothing.

It was not good when he would grab Harvey and then, they would proceed to wrestle. When Harvey would pull himself out of the others guy's hold, he would demonstrate his boxing skills by smacking the other guy with several quick jabs before they would tumble down in a heap again. I admired Harvey for his determination to teach the other guy a lesson, but then it never got completely resolved as they might go at it again months later.

It's funny because my late brother's best friend is Gregg Grimshaw of the NAPA auto store and his children were like Harvey's kids.

The two were like brothers at the time of his passing and we still mourn his senseless passing each day. I came to realize that many deaths fit in the accidental or senseless category as many can be prevented with quick intervention and proper follow-up care.

The period I am describing was a time that the government policies of extermination, relocation, and paternalism were not working and Lakota people were struggling to find their place in a slowly changing world; never mind the local racial tensions with people in Valentine, Winner, or even the white folks in Mission.

There didn't seem to be a deep appreciation for the Lakota language, although there were many notable Sicangu people who kept it alive and passed it on. When I was a youngster I didn't know a lot of the more prominent older Lakota people on the Rosebud, but I knew of people like Sam and Nancy White Horse, Bill Menard, Al Larvie, grandma Julie Larvie, my grandma Charlotte Hawkins, old Bill Jordan, Ed and Cecilia Stands, Moses and Julie Marshall, grandma Night Pipe who spoke Lakota with a 'D' accent, all of my aunties and uncles, and Johnny and Cleveland Clairmont to name but a few. These folks spoke primarily Lakota amongst themselves and there was no anxiety about the language disappearing.

When someone would use a Lakota word with many syllables, my Mom would call them 'jawbreakers' and without her defining what that meant, I kind of knew. When I was a youngster I remember someone saying the word, "bohiyake" and hearing some discussion about its meaning. I think it meant something that is kind of exaggerated. I recall Sam White Horse teasing my Carl when he played in a basketball game and made the last shot. Sam said, "Scabola ohiye" as he described the game. I never knew what 'scabola' meant, but it sounded funny and the phrase was often talked about.

Another time, one of my cousins was trying to define the difference between 'tehicila' and 'waste ci laka.' She came up with the idea that 'tehicila' could mean, 'I am stingy with you' rather than I value you or I care about you. We had a good laugh at her efforts to come up with an acceptable meaning.

I don't think many young people during that time really appreciated Lakota because it wasn't taught in the schools.

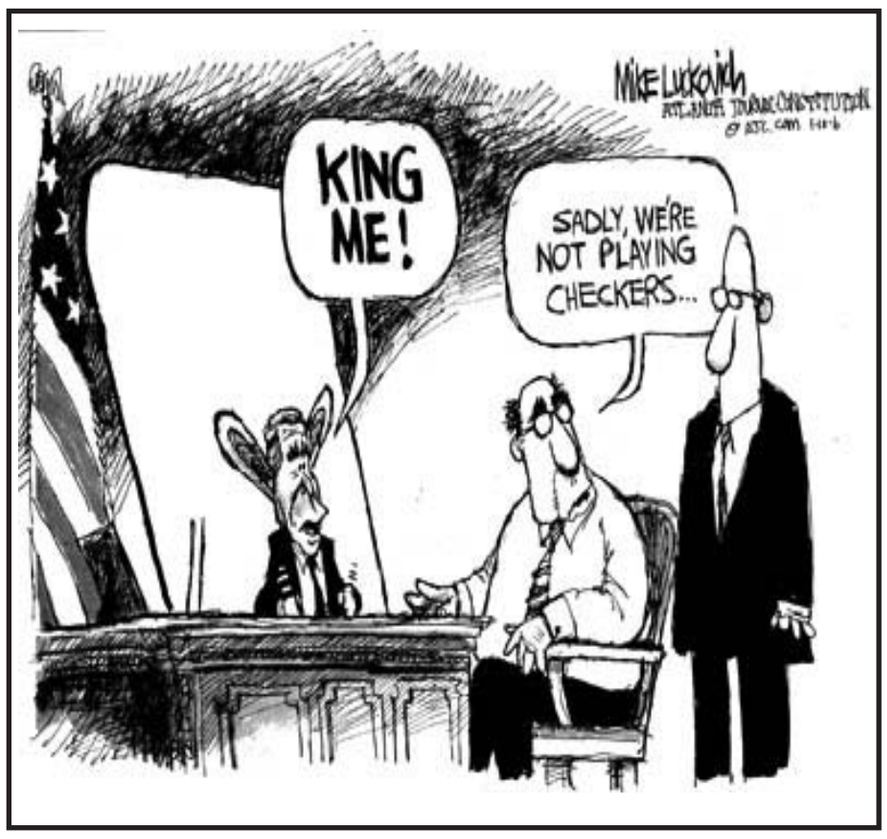
There was no mention of the beauty of the Lakota culture and philosophy, much less talk of it one day slowly slipping away. One of my lasting memories of Lakota was when my grandma was visiting with Dicky Leneaugh's grandma next door. I heard her in Lakota say to my grandma, "Takoja nitawa Lakota nuhumpi he?' My grandma replied in Lakota that her grandchildren didn't understand Lakota and I was amazed because I understood what they had said to each other. I didn't know how to tell my grandma in Lakota that I understood.

What my grandma didn't realize was that some of us grandchildren had learned to understand Lakota, while we taught her English in the process. One time she said she didn't know what 'concern' meant but wanted to use it in a sentence. So, she says, "I concern I am going to make some bread" and we chuckled.

There are so many complex words in Lakota that it makes you realize that Lakota people were very intelligent.

I heard one lady talking over KINI at the council meeting and she said that there was evidence that Lakota people had occupied this one site in northeastern South Dakota called Northgate Hills, I think, 6,000 years ago.

It confirms what many of us guess in terms of a timeframe, that the Lakota people occupied the area.



There are some wonderful sounding words in Lakota, like oicage, itoka, or inyukala. I like the word for 'wake' which is wihankiktapi.

The word for throwing your hat in the ring and running for office is caje oehpekiyapi and it literally translates throwing your name out there. Tahansi Ned Metcalf told me the Lakota word for 'oppression' but I didn't write down, as I try to do with many words I hear.

The word eyecunsica describes something that is hard to do. Anyway, Lakota word study is an ongoing thing, as I often quiz my kola, Pat Bad Hand, about certain words.

If Lakota isn't your primary language, then it is difficult to retain all the rules and words that my Mom took the liberty of calling 'jawbreakers.'

A tribute to peace makers, it takes courage

BY RICHARD IRON CLOUD
Porcupine, South Dakota

At a time when humankind is in such a dark place, we are definitely in need of the light of the peace makers, people like the late Martin Luther King, Jr.

Most recently Gold Star Mother Cindy Sheehan, Chief Arvol Looking Horse, and the four members of Christian Peacemaker Teams who were taken captive in Iraq - these people possess a higher passion for peace.

They were willing to put themselves in harm's way to wage peace. If Martin Luther King, Jr., were here, he would be speaking out in his loud voice against the war. He would once again tell the leaders of this country that the initiative to go to war with Iraq was ours, and the initiative to the stop the senseless bloodshed is ours.

When Cindy Sheehan camped out in front of George W. Bush's ranch in Crawford, TX, she only had one question: "What was the noble cause that my son died for?" George Bush refused to see her.

When Chief Arvol Looking Horse started the World Prayer for Peace Day on June 21st of every year during the summer solstice, he did this because of prophesies that said that if we do not unite spiritually then we are in for a lot of chaos and destruction.

Every one of us has the capability to be a peace maker, and every one of us matters. Nobody's voice is unimportant. We can all make a difference if we choose to take the risk to be a peacemaker.

The following story by an unknown author illustrates that fact.

"Tell me the weight of a snowflake," a robin asked a wild dove. "Nothing more than nothing," was the answer. "In that case I must tell you a marvelous story," the robin said. "I sat on the branch of a fir, close to its trunk, when it began to snow -- not heavily, not in a raging blizzard, no, just like in a dream, without any violence. Since I didn't have anything better to do, I counted the snowflakes settling on the twigs and needles of my branch.

Their number was exactly 3,741,952. When the next snowflake dropped onto the branch - nothing more than nothing, as you say - the branch broke off." Having said that, the robin flew away. The dove, since Noah's time an authority on the matter, thought for awhile and said to herself: "Perhaps there is only one person's voice lacking for peace to come to the world."

I accept as true that we all possess the light of the peacemaker; we have the potential to be peacemakers.

We must reach within ourselves to wage peace in our communities.

One of the supreme acts of peace making is apologizing for ones transgressions. One such act was made here on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation when our President Cecilia Fire Thunder's older sister, Shirley Murphy, told her little sister to apologize to all the people that she hurt.

She did this on the council floor, and this was a courageous act of healing. If all of us were to apologize to all the people who we hurt, either intentionally or unintentionally, this world would be a more peaceful place.

People of the Islamic faith must call everyone they know and ask for their forgiveness before they go on the Hajj or pilgrimage to Mecca, so when they stand before Allah they will have a clean slate, and they can be forgiven for their sins.

They say, "An angry people can never have peace." I believe this to be so.

Things to empower yourself

We have a choice when our body outlives our minds

By Patty Pourier

Has modern medicine taken our dignity to die a natural death? I have had the unfortunate experience of having both of my grandmothers suffer from Alzheimer's.

My Grandma Pich was in the nursing home in Rushville for 15 years, knowing no one. She lived until she was 92. She was a wonderful woman. She was spunky, and full of wit. Grandma worked hard.

When she was young she worked on a thrashing crew. Her hands were big and strong. She loved her takojas. We would go down the road with her singing patriotic songs. One of her sons was in Patton's army during WWII. She was a naturalized citizen of the United States, and her love for America was deep.

What you saw was what you got with Grandma Pich. She was not afraid to tell you what was what. As a child there was great security in that. You always knew where you stood. Grandma saw no colors when it came to people. She treated everyone as to the character they put forth, not by their ethnicity.

After my grandparents grew older they lived in Custer. Their garden was three acres of bottomland right on French Creek. They raised TONS of food. She canned vegetables for the winter, and the extra food they gave away.

Grandma was a proud woman, in a way that was real and unpretentious. She always wore a housedress, and apron, with stockings that tied at the knee. She was very clean, but never fancy in anyway. She was a person for whom a child could learn honesty, compassion and selflessness.

Grandma Pich had a big heart and knew how to be a friend. She sat with Mr. Swett (the gentlemen "Swett, S.D." is named after) daily when he was suffering from cancer and his wife Hazel had to run the store. She sat with Mrs. Buresh from Batesland over a month, until she succumb to her illness.

And yet, she did not have the dignity she granted others when they died at home, with people who were by their bed because they cared. Her body outlived her mind. She laid for 15 years in the Rushville nursing home. I remember going to see her and the stench that would hit me at the door. I hated to see grandma die that way.

Today, my Grandma Henschel lays in the Bennett County Nursing Home. She is 95 years old. She was a schoolteacher. Grandma Henschel was the "Beaver Cleavers" grandma. Her house was spotless. Her hair looked liked she had just stepped out of a beauty shop.

When we stayed at her house, on ironed sheets and pillow cases, we awoke to the smell of fresh baked cinnamon knots, bacon frying, several kinds of cereal, fruit all cut up, and half and half laid out on the table, and we felt like princesses.

Grandma Henschel could make an apple pie to die for. She always had fresh baked homemade cookies in her cookie drawer. She lived to serve others. She loved being a schoolteacher, and loved to serve my grandfather, even with his demanding demeanor.

If you could define a lady, she would be it! I once sent her a homemade card with the Bible's definition of love, as she possessed all of these traits. When she was well she was patient, kind, not proud or rude, she was not self-seeking and did not anger easily, she kept no record of wrongs, and she did not wish anything bad on anyone. She always hoped and looked for the good in others.

I was shocked as I entered grandma's room. It did not look like her. She was a pasty gray color. It appeared her teeth were to big for her face, as she had lost so much weight.

Her hair was clean, but combed straight back with no style at all. She did not open her matted eyes. Grandmas right knee was swollen several times it normal size. When the nursing staff moved her, she would yell, "How could you be so mean, that hurts!"

The Tylenol they gave her had to be given rectally. And her diaper was changed when needed. Every movement caused great anguish. When the nurse tried to move her, Grandma was cantankerous and grabbed a hold of the nurses finger so hard she grimaced.

The grandma I knew would have absolutely hated to be in that bed in that way. According to an article Posted in Alzheimer's ARTICLES, Facts About Alzheimers, "One of the most distressing aspects of Alzheimer's disease is the complete change of personality many people suffer. This is especially distressing for their relatives and friends. The personality and general behavior of Alzheimer sufferers in the later stages often seems to be in complete contrast to the usual behavior they have always exhibited in their previous life."

This is certainly true of my Grandma Henschel. Do we really want to live to this stage of our life? Grandma had two pace makers so her heart would beat steadily. One 20 years ago. The second one after the Alzheimer's was well advanced. Would she have wanted the second one, if it had been her decision? I do not blame my family for the decisions they have made with Grandma's health, they did the best they could, and I appreciate the fact they have tried to help her. But, seeing her die in the last stages of Alzheimer's, suffering with years of pain, and no dignity what so ever, is hard. Is this humane? Have we manipulated Gods plan for our lives.

Modern medicine has helped our bodies to out live our minds. We do not have a choice when and how we die, unless we take our life. But we can choose how much care we wish to have on this journey from birth to death, if we choose to write it down, so others know our wishes. It is hard to do, but not near as hard as suffering for years, with no dignity.

Your wishes can be written down in a living will. If you do not have one, I suggest you get one. If not for you, then for your family.

Notes From Indian Country

When is a war considered a just war?

By Tim Giago

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

When I turned 17 years old there was a war going on. Like many young men of that era, I didn't wait to be drafted, I volunteered.

The year was 1951 and the war was called a "Police Action" but more than 40,000 Americans gave up their lives while serving as this country's policemen in Korea.

I never really thought about the politics of the war. I was told that the Communist North Korea had invaded the free country of South Korea and it was our duty to stop and drive them back across the 38th Parallel. Not once did I doubt the integrity of our Nation's leaders or question their reasons for going to war. Was this a just war? When can a war be called just?

I suppose Korea could be called a just war. After all, we were fighting to keep an invading army from taking away the freedom of another nation. We were young, we were fearless, and above all, we were patriotic. Without a shred of a doubt we trusted and respected our government. Would President Harry Truman lie to us? Never!

And we walked away from Korea with our heads held high. Despite the intervention of the Communist China, we had driven the enemy back to the 38th Parallel. Perhaps the war was a stalemate, but a stalemate is better than a loss.

But everything seemed to go awry in Vietnam. When we returned from Korea there were no protestors calling us baby killers and worse. But during the Vietnam Conflict it seemed that the entire nation was against the war and in their anger and hate for the war they turned on the troops fighting the war.

A war is personal when one is actively involved, but it is also personal when a close friend or relative loses his life. This week the war in Iraq took a personal turn for me and for many Lakota people.

Cpl. Brett Lee Lundstrum, USMC, was just 22 years old when he was killed by enemy fire at Fallujah, Iraq. He was an enrolled member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. His mother, Doyla Carol (Underbaggage) Lundstrum was the foster daughter of Lynn Rapp my ex-wife, and during the years we were together Doyla and her two sons, Brett and Eddy, spend many holidays and many happy hours at our house.

They even attended the Christmas parties we held for the staff of my newspaper, Indian Country Today.

At one Christmas party, my step-daughter Susie, a very blonde young lady, looked around the room at the mixture of children attending the party and asked the band to play "The Brady Bunch." It was her tribute to her Lakota brothers and sisters in the room.

We watched this awkward teenager grow into a strapping young man. But all of a sudden, his life is over before it has even begun. In his obituary it reads, "Brett was charismatic with a kind and generous soul; always humorous, with a smile, he lit up any room or place he entered." That's Brett. His laugh and smile were contagious. He loved the Marines and he loved serving his country. And just as I when I was 17-years old, he never questioned the reasons he was sent to Iraq. He considered it his duty as a United States Marine to follow the orders of his commanding officer.

When one serves in the military it seems we do not question the reasons we are at war. We only do our duty and try to serve as best we can. It is only when we are older and have witnessed the devastation of war and have seen firsthand the political implications, then war takes on a different light.

Far be it for me to ever question the integrity and courage of those men and women serving today in Iraq and Afghanistan. They are in the military and they obey orders. They also take great pride in the job they are doing. But it seems that President George W. Bush has intertwined honest criticism of the war with disrespect for those serving in combat. From my heart I can tell you that they are not the same.

We are in a war that began with a dark lie that has taken on different hues of dishonesty as the war has dragged on. We are in a war that can end in only one of two ways: either the new Iraqi government will stabilize as a theocracy or the Nation of Iraq will dissolve into a civil war that will pit the Shiite and Kurds against the once controlling Sunni forces.

In either case the end product will not be what the chicken hawks that led us into this war intended. If Iraq becomes another Iran with mullahs as leaders or deteriorates into a civil war costing thousands of lives, who is the winner? It will not be the people of Iraq and certainly not the brave, young men and women that are dying every day in pursuit of a victorious ending. And it will not be the politicians responsible for the war.

I feel the loss of Brett as do all of the people of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. He was one of us and he gave his life for a cause in which he truly believed. I honor and respect his courage, but that does not preclude me from questioning the wisdom of those elected leaders who sent him into this unjust war.

May Brett rest in peace and may his Journey to the Spirit World be filled with wonder.

New state law enforcement building dedicated

More room for officer training

PIERRE (AP) _ The new state law enforcement building at the north edge of the capital city was dedicated last Wednesday in honor of the late Gov. George Mickelson.

Attorney General Larry Long said the $25 million building will improve the efficiency of several state agencies that are involved in law enforcement operations. Those agencies, in turn, assist local law enforcement across the state, he said.

The building houses the attorney general's office, the Division of Criminal Investigation, the state crime lab, law enforcement training, state radio communications, and emergency operations.

Doug Lake, former DCI head, proposed the facility seven years ago, and current DCI Director Kevin Thom and state Public Safety Secretary Tom Dravland convinced Long to ask the Legislature for funding.

The George S. Mickelson Criminal Justice Center replaces facilities that had been inadequate for years, Long said.

``These facilities were too small and too old," he said.

While criminal investigators and specialists in the old crime lab were able to keep up with the latest technology, including sophisticated DNA testing and computer sleuthing, the lab itself fell far short of needs, the attorney general said.

Mickelson, who died in a 1993 plane crash during his second term as governor, was a former prosecutor and former head of the state Parole Board.

As governor, he convinced the Legislature to approve the Crime Victims Compensation Fund, a bill of rights for crime victims and create drug-free zones around schools, Long said.

Mickelson's widow, who remarried several years ago, told the crowd of about 500 that her late husband dearly loved South Dakota and being governor.

``It is an incredible honor to have this building carry George's name," Linda Mickelson Graham said.

Mike Leidholt, Hughes County sheriff, said the new building will be especially beneficial for police training, not only for new recruits who must complete 12 weeks of instruction, but also experienced officers who wish to advance their training.

Long said the state has helped American Indian police officers for years, but it had limited openings for them.

The old cramped facilities could handle no more than 40 people at a time. The new dormitory has 65 rooms, each of which can house two people.

Long said the academy handles about 120 officers a year in the basic 12-week training program, but more than 4,000 people go through special or refresher training each year.

Lt. Mitch Wisecarver, an Oglala Sioux Tribe lawman, said most tribal officers have had to go to New Mexico for training in the past.

Two indoor firing ranges, classrooms, an exercise room, a gymnasium, and a cafeteria also are located in the Mickelson Center.

The massive building also houses the state Emergency Operations Center for use in times of tornadoes, blizzards and floods. It allows the governor and officials from various agencies to gather in a fortified amphitheater where they can coordinate response efforts to both natural disasters and terrorism.

The state received $5 million in federal money, and the Legislature provided $8 million in direct appropriations and authorized $12.8 million in bonding for the building.

RST Veterans Affairs sponsors housing needs forum

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The RST Veterans Affairs program sponsored a housing needs forum that was convened at the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Veterans building on Jan. 11. In a continuing effort to be responsive to Sicangu veterans the Veterans affairs program brought several entities together that described their programs, while fielding appropriate questions relative to veterans housing needs. Housing has been a critical need for homeless, single and married military veterans and today's forum highlighted some of the programs that are targeted specifically for veterans.

Orlando Morrison, RST veteran's service officer, initiated the forum. Morrison said, "We finally came together, SWA, TLE, BIA, and the VA. They need to work together as it takes awhile to get a home site. I wished there could have been more vets. There are a lot of good questions from the veterans here - this is a good start."

The Sicangu Wicoti Awanyakape Corporation was represented by Connie Bordeaux, acting coordinator of their veterans program, Emily Widow, secretary, Monica Hunger Larvie, contracting officer, and Larry Wright, environmental compliance officer. SWA director, Amos Prue spoke to the gathering toward the end of the day.

Nick Russo and Jocelyn Johnson, from the Regional Loan Center for Veterans in St. Paul, Minn. were in attendance to encourage more military veterans on the Rosebud to complete their application for a VA home loan. Russo said, "We have about 150 veterans, but only about eight have completed their applications for a VA loan. We are here to clear up misunderstandings about the program so more will apply. We can help fill out the packet, and you have to take care of the lease, the land, and the water. We can help by talking to the contractor."

Russo said that the upper limit for a VA loan is $80,000.00 over 30 years. A veteran can also purchase an existing home or have one constructed. Morrison made

Chippewa-Cree tribe launches get-tough meth campaign

ROCKY BOY, Mont. (AP) - Alarmed by "epidemic" methamphetamine addiction here, the Chippewa-Cree Business Committee last week adopted a get-tough plan to curtail the drug and treat those who become addicted.

Leading the charge is the newly created tribal meth advisory committee. The 12-member panel is tasked with curbing meth's spread across the reservation, using a combination of prevention, intervention, treatment and increased law enforcement.

The panel also is working to forge alliances with other area tribes and existing anti-meth groups.

The project will require participation by every tribal department, said tribal councilman and state lawmaker Jonathan Windy Boy.

"We want a more unified approach," said Windy Boy, who serves on the panel with other council members, department heads and local leaders.

Meth is a growing problem on the reservation, said Brenda Guardipee, director of the tribe's social services program.

The drug has caused client numbers at the reservation's outpatient drug treatment center to rise. The number of meth-related child welfare cases also is growing.

In addition, more tribal welfare recipients are failing mandatory drug testing. And children as young as 12 have tested positive for the drug in the juvenile justice program.

"If it's accessible (to) a 12-year-old, it's easily accessible for anyone else," Guardipee said.

Large-scale drug dealers sometimes target reservations like Rocky Boy's as distribution hubs, according to the 9-page community action plan approved by the tribal council.

A federal court last year sentenced a drug runner for selling meth on reservations in Wyoming, Washington State, South Dakota and Nebraska. The man apparently exploited jurisdictional loopholes in law enforcement by targeting reservations.

Stories like that have Rocky Boy's officials on the offensive.

The Chippewa-Cree meth plan includes a lengthy list of goals. The get-tough strategies include an ordinance that would allow tribal housing officials to evict tenants who sell or distribute drugs.

Here are other highlights:

Workshops and community forums to educate the public about meth.

Old 1878 Buffalo Bill billboard restored, descendants of John Nelson invited to ceremony

BY MARIROSE MORRIS
Special to the Times

JAMESTOWN, N.Y - John Y. Nelson, Sr. is back in the news! In the mid 1860's, Nelson married Jenny Lone Wolf, daughter of Chief Smoke of the Oglala Lakota (Sioux) and sister of Red Cloud. He was a close friend of William "Buffalo Bill" Cody, a scout for the U.S. Army, a guide for Morman emigrants on their way to Utah, an interpreter for the Lakota, the Sheriff in Sidney, Nebraska, a teller of tall tales, and an otherwise impressive character.

In late spring of 2002, an exterior brick facade wall came loose from a building owned by the Civic Center Development Corporation in Jamestown, New York and was about to collapse. As a construction crew removed the last of the bricks on June 6, 2002, they discovered that the wood sheathing behind it had a 26'x10' billboard on it advertising a William Cody (Buffalo Bill) show in Jamestown. The largest single image that was still glued to the exterior wooden wall was approximtely 8' x 3.5" of a man standing, holding a rifle. Research identified him as John Y. Nelson, a "mountain man" who had a major role in the show.

The billboard was announcing the show "Buffalo Bill in his new theatrical drama.... May Cody" at the old Allen Opera House on March 14,

1878. The images under these words include that of a young Buffalo Bill, waving his hat to an admiring crowd. A couple of prancing horses and a mule. Keith Schmitt, Acting Director of the Jamestown Arts Council was contacted and restoration of the billboard began. "We knew we had to act quickly," the point that some veterans prefer to purchase a manufactured home so that there is minimal waiting for a home.

Forum for veteran's housing needs

There is a strong desire by the Regional Loan Center for Veterans to collaborate with SWA to see if existing HUD homes can be purchased by veterans. Veteran, Cornell "Jack" Menard, asked if a veteran could purchase an existing HUD home through the VA and Monica Hunger Larvie said, "It can be explored. It is feasible. We are a tribal entity program with HUD money and regulations which we must follow. There are enrollment and income guidelines."

Kevin Boyd of RST Water Resources said that his office works to ensure that a homesite is located close to the Mni Wiconi pipeline. He said, "We make sure that it is a good place to put a house and that there is no contaminated sites." Russo noted that the VA does not contract for laying pipe, trenching or water; however it is something that the I.H.S. environmental office will do. Jerry Dillon, construction inspector at the environmental office said that I.H.S. requires an application, a legal description of the site, and proof of ownership or a BIA lease. Proof of tribal enrollment is also required. He said, "We do an MOA to do the contract work with the Rosebud Sioux tribe. We also do a design inspection." I.H.S. also ensures that an archeological assessment is completed so that the integrity of any cultural objects is left intact. Once the work is done, which is free of charge, it becomes the property of the home owner.

Larry Wright, SWA environmental compliance officer explained that a prospective home site assignee should actually go onsite and visually examine his assignment. When a home site is selected it is somewhat deceptive because it is done, initially, using a map and one cannot tell if the site is on the side of a hill or any other spot that maybe objectionable to the assignee.

Connie Bordeaux of SWA explained that they have a "Core" program for veterans. It is a single unit structure that has been designed for single and homeless veterans in mind. The value of the core unit is $40.000.00, however they are available to veterans at a cost of $10,000.00 to be paid over 15 years. A veteran can also add a bedroom or two after one year of occupancy.

Phyllis Whiteshield-Iyotte of White River who is the vice-chairperson of the SWA Corporation further explained the rationale for the Core program. She said, "Single veterans needed a place to go, and Orlando Morrison had a vision for the homeless veterans, veterans who did not want to be a bother to their families."

Robert Joe Moore, a U.S. Marine with the 5th Artillery Group served in the military from 1968-72 and was stationed in Twenty Nine Palms, Calif. and the Marine Barracks in Hawaii. He was at the Veterans forum to see if the 'Core' home or a VA loan to buy his own house was suited for his needs. He had been assigned a home site and it was partially fenced off.

The Veterans housing forum was successful in convening several entities on the Rosebud, including the regional VA office. It was an opportunity for RST Veterans Affairs director, Orlando Morrison to see what an initial effort to hold these kinds of meetings would look like. Given the long wait in applying for a home site to finally closing a VA loan and moving into a house, future meetings such as this one may attract many more Veterans who are in need of housing. It will take a good public relations effort to get the rest of the Veterans to a meeting, but it will be well worth it given the end product of adequate shelter for Veterans.

Public reports on the impact meth is having on tribal programs.

Programs to help communities police themselves, including forums where local churches, schools and groups can become involved.

Outreach assistance from other reservations.

Creation of a meth lab clean-up program, which the reservation lacks.

Development of a toll-free hotline so residents can anonymously report meth crimes.

Creation of a centralized registry to track meth offenders from one reservation to the next.

Development of a drug court, similar to a pilot program operating in Great Falls, as part of the treatment component.

Expanded traditional and contemporary drug treatment programs at the reservation's White Sky Hope Center outpatient drug treatment center.

All this is needed, Guardipee said, to prevent one of her biggest fears, that meth addiction will become an accepted part of the reservation landscape.

"We can't look at it like that," she said.

The key, said Windy Boy, is to create an environment where everyone is working together against methamphetamine.

It's also important to brainstorm innovative ways to fight the drug and provide effective addiction treatment, he said.

"We've been touched by this for a long time, and I think that fresh ideas and a new approach need to be done," Windy Boy added. "This is not going to go away."

The tribe plans to pay for the project with tribal funds and grants.

The next step is a Jan. 31 meeting with officials from a local meth task force, and later with the Fort Belknap Reservation tribal council.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna:

I'm writing to you to ask you a question. We are living with an older man and we just don't know what he is doing in our home.

We want to know why he is there with us. We need to know so we could get on with our lives. There is two of us women living there and we would like to know what he wants?

Sincerely Native Angel

Dear Native Angel:

I have talked with your visitor. He tells me that he is there to create understanding that we walk in more than one world.

He says that he is there to remind you of times that have gone by. He says, "I want them to pay attention to me, to give me a plate of food, to offer me a cigarette and coffee, and then I will go. I am here to remind them of their relatives that still are here but gone." He also says that he is not there to pester anyone, but to remind them that life never ends. Please, when you feed him and offer him tobacco pray and ask that the Spirits come and lead him home - that will help him. Sometimes people need help especially when they temporarily get "lost."

He means no harm.

Dear Anna:

I have noticed that some Lakota men have a tendency to pout and withhold affection. I have had to two relationships with Lakota men and they both have pouted on me when we didn't agree on something. I am a person that enjoys peace and compassion and don't like confrontation but more like good communication to work things out. I get discouraged when I try to get past that behavior and understand why they do that. I have talked to several other women and we agreed that this is a behavior that is more in older Lakota men, than the younger generation. Why is this?

Discouraged

Dear Discouraged:

I have noticed in my four years of counseling Lakota people, that there probably are more "pouters" among the Lakota men than I have seen elsewhere. It is a technique used to control someone else's behavior without verbalization. It is manipulative behavior. I am a white woman, so I cannot speak as a Lakota, but I feel that I do understand some of the roots of this common behavior.

It is a direct result (in my opinion) of oppression and the methods of control specifically related to the boarding school experience or learned behavior. It is a direct result of the dehumanizing treatment by the white European toward the Indian people. That treatment accurately reflects the horrible attitudes of the church and white government that the Indian people, especially the males, were "less than" their white counterparts. It was meant to dehumanize and de-spirit the Indian, and, sadly, it worked.

If the men would understand that pouting behavior is the behavior of a victim - not a man of balance and power, they would stop. If further, they would recognize it as an enforced pattern (designed on purpose) to destroy the mental well-being of the Indian people, they would stop. It is part of the genocide energy design to destroy a people by disrupting their ability to live in a graceful and loving way. Manipulation of children's behavior through disapproval, especially silence is abuse. It was a design with the intention to subvert the spirit of a person, through disapproval.

The Lakota woman have reacted a little differently in their response to this abuse.

They have become vocal, verbal, and sometimes when it is misdirected it is demonstrated through back-stabbing and gossip to try and control the outcome of someone else's experience, especially when they feel powerless or less-than in their own lives.

Men have taken it to the level of the "silent treatment." This behavior is so foul because it is not easily corrected. It is hard to discuss in person and in therapy because it is sometimes perceived as passive - but it is aggressive. Nonetheless, anyway you look at it, it is abuse. A woman that receives the pouting treatment will respond through frustration, a precursor to violence (even if suppressed).

The woman usually responds by trying to rectify the situation through getting to the "root" of the problem.

Usually, the "root" is a manufactured (mentally and emotionally manufactured) wrong - based on the understanding that the man is not powerful in his own life, that any disagreement with him or any personal path pursued with passion that does not include him, means he is not loved, and that your behavior that preceded his pout somehow means you don't give a rip what he thinks.

It is a good time for the mothers and fathers of boys in particular to help the children when they are young to release this nasty trait (passed on from generation to generation through dysfunction).

It is a parent's responsibility to teach their children that just because they don't always get their way, or you are not always in agreement with them, they are loved. Lakota men do not trust (generally) that they are truly loved, or for that matter, deserving of the love they have.

There is an additional note however, sometimes a pouty male may indicate the on-set of physical problems such as diabetes. In the meantime, we are all self-healers.

If you are a man, and you pout more than once a year, then heal yourself. You are being self-indulgent, spoiled, and unreasonable - and worse, you are participating in the energy of genocide.

You are destroying the love in your life. Women are people, and they will disagree with you (some think that IS their job). Please contribute to the woman you love's life by allowing her the freedom to be herself, understanding that her personal goals, her attention to others, her very nature to be compassionate (a reflection of the Mother Earth) and to support her friends does not mean she doesn't love you.

So quit trying to change her through silence, or she will be one of the many casualties in your life. Lakota men and women need to remember who they are, they have the four virtues and the seven values, the tools to become whole.

Dear Anna:

My grand father is very sick. He is very old, almost 60. Will he live? I don't want him to die, I want him to see me graduate someday.

Crying hard for my grandpa

Dear Crying:

I do see him recovering. He has a heart problem that will be corrected. He will see you graduate, both from grade-school and high school. Talk to him on the phone when he is in the hospital and see him a lot when he is home recovering. You will help him live a little longer. 60, sheesh, that is old, almost the same as me.

Dear Anna:

I lost my wallet. I have had everything duplicated and taken care of now, but I am crying over the pictures of my parents that I had - and there are no duplicates.

It may seem like a small thing, but can you help me find it? Do you see it being returned to me?

Still Looking

Dear Still Looking:

I do see your wallet near a dirty-clothes basket, beside a dresser near a cold air return (a grate in the floor).

It will fall out of some tangled clothes. It may be at your mother's house or your aunties - not at your house. You will find it - when you do - let me know.

Dear Anna:

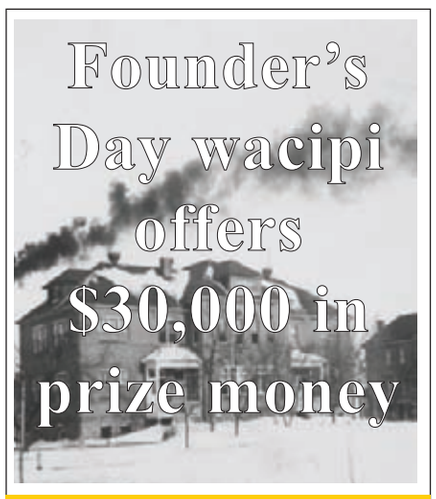
I am a sophomore. When I graduate I want to leave the rez and this area. I want to go to school on the west coast.

The trouble is that my mom needs me to help with my younger brothers and sisters - and I want to go off and take care of myself to build a better financial future so that I can help my mom and my brothers and sisters. What do you see? Am I stuck here forever?

Feels like I'm gonna be stuck

Dear Feels Stuck:

Two years from now, when you graduate, I see you going to school in North Dakota for awhile - and then you may transfer to the west coast and continue until you graduate (or you may opt to go to school in Rapid City until you graduate).



The Creator has special blessings in store for you for helping your mother and your siblings. I do see a time when you are able to help your family a lot financially and emotionally. Blessings to you.

Council dismisses complaint on Scherich

Hires Adams as chief judge, Emery as associate judge and Roberts as tribal attorney

BY TOM CRASH
Time's Correspondent

PORCUPINE - Following council procedures, the council voted 9-7 with one not voting, to dismiss a complaint filed against Juanita Scherich, council representative from Medicine Root District, by the district. The Oglala Sioux Tribal Council met for their regular quarterly meeting on Monday in Porcupine.

Medicine Root District's complaint cited no written reports to the district, documented statements stating Scherich does not have to honor district resolutions and micromanaging of tribal programs, especially the TWEP program. Voting to dismiss the complaint included Garfield Steele, Mary Poor Thunder, Tom Poor Bear, Will Peters, Maxine Lakota, Valerie Janis, Kathy Janis, Craig Dillon and Lydia Bear Killer. Voting not to dismiss included, Bernard White Face, Austin Watkins, Paul Little, Philip Good Crow, Ella John Carlow and Ruth Brown.

A motion by Oglala council representative, Paul Little, to dismiss the complaint filed against Walt Big Crow was not recognized by tribal president, Cecelia Fire Thunder.

"A complaint against councilman Big Crow has already been accepted by the council and set for a hearing," said Fire Thunder, "I cannot recognize a motion to dismiss at this time."

Garfield Steele made a motion to move the hearing for Big Crow from Jan. 26 to Jan. 31 in Porcupine at the CAP Office and that the suspension remain in place until the hearing. Council voted 14-3 in approval.

After interviewing three candidates to fill out the unexpired term of OST chief judge, Cheryl Three Stars Valandra, the council voted seven for Lisa Adams and seven for George Patton and one for Judith Roberts. Patton decided to withdraw his name from the selection process, stating that he would be better suited to the tribal attorney position that he had already been chosen for and that he needed the rest of January and most of February to study for the SD state bar exam.

Over the concerns of Juanita Scherich about having someone who has federal Indian law experience and is a tribal member, the council entertained a motion by Lyle Jack and seconded by Kathy Janis to select Lisa Adams as

Eyre to co-produce supernatural thriller 'Imprint' on Pine Ridge

RAPID CITY - Chris Eyre and the Linn Productions Company have issued a casting call for the movie 'Imprint' which will be a supernatural Native American thriller.

It will be a feature length movie which will be shot on the Pine Ridge reservation and the Black Hills area.

The storyline originally had been written about non-Indians living in a farmhouse somewhere in South Dakota, but was later changed to be about Native people living in a house.

Apparently, it was in response to Native actors claiming that there are relatively few contemporary acting parts for them.

The casting call is asking for Native actors age eighteen and up and other Native people fifteen and up to serve as extras for the movie.

Actors are encouraged to go to the Black Hills Community Arts Resource Center at 1202 E. St. Francis Street in Rapid City between the hours of 9:00 am and noon on January 28.

The Black Hills Film Resource Council and the Lakota Film and Television Group will also be at the casting call for 'Imprint' to register Native actors and production personnel for the BHFRC's new website according to the casting call.

Public Safety releases information about surcharge

Tribal ordinances will allow dispatch to keep part of fee

BY WINONA L. RICHARDS-CRAZY THUNDER
Special to the Times

PINE RIDGE - Under a Public Law 93-638 contract with the Bureau of Indian Affairs the OST Department of Public Safety has upgraded the technology used to respond to 911 calls to the dispatch center. The dispatch center has ten dispatchers and two positions which are funded by 911 surcharge monies collected.

In May of 2004, OST ordinance 04-05 authorized the identification of telephone companies serving Oglala tribal members and the collection of a $1.00 fee for each customer per month. The surcharge would be divided up with seventy-five percent going to public safety and twenty-five percent going back to OST. The OST-DPS did exactly what intended to do and kept the technology in place.

Telephone companies were taxing the people living with the exterior boundaries of the Pine Ridge reservation. These taxes were then sent off reservation to other counties, like Jackson and Bennett County. The tax money collected from Lakota people was never sent back to the tribe. Jackson country used the 911 money to contract with Pennington County Dispatching Services. If you lived in the Wanblee area, for example, and called 911 Pennington County they would answer and call the OST-DPS dispatch and provide them with the information and tribal officers would respond. Bennett County did the same, as they contracted with the Winner Police Department which is 148 miles away. Bennett County collected the 911 surcharge money and sent it to Winner. If you lived in Allen, for example, Winner dispatch would call the Porcupine Dispatch center. All the money collected has not come back to the tribe, even though it was the OST-DPS tribal employees who did the work.

OST ordinance 05-32 was passed by the OST tribal council in August 2005 to address the issue of the money being sent off the reservation. The new ordinance which supersedes ordinance 04-05 changed the OST surcharge from $1.00 to $3.00. The money is put back into to OST-DPS dispatching services. It also stopped the fees collected by Bennett and Jackson counties. If you live on the reservation you only pay the tribal surcharge. Some phone companies even doubled charged customers for 911 fees, in the past.

If you will examine your phone bill, you will see a public utility tax and a state tax. Ordinance 05-32 stopped the flow of these taxes off the reservation and directed them back to the tribe. To date, there are four phone companies on the reservation. They are still having trouble collecting the tribe's surcharge fee, when they had no trouble collecting the fees when it was for Jackson and Bennett counties.

OST-DPS is working to keep the New World Computer Aided Dispatching system in place.

a chief judge to fill the unexpired term of Three Stars Valandra and passed it 14-1.

Adams, a 1990 graduate of the Willamette University College of Law, has been the senior attorney for the Yurok Tribe of Klamath California since October of 2002.

From 1996 through 2002 Adams worked for the city of Newark as an assistant municipal prosecutor and community prosecutor and for the last 15 years has been married to Melvin Adams, a member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

A number of council representatives expressed frustration at not having a tribal attorney present for the council meetings, especially since the council had just hired two new attorneys. George Patton's contract was to be negotiated with the judiciary committee and approved by the executive board with the understanding that he would not be able to go to work until after the bar exam on Feb. 21 and 22.

Ruth Brown made a motion to hire Judith Roberts as a tribal attorney as long as she would be able to start on Tuesday; seconded by Mary Poor Thunder, the resolution passed 12-2. After earning a law degree from the University of North Dakota School of Law in 2004, Roberts worked as a managing attorney for the Dakota Plains Legal Service office in Ft. Yates, N. Dak. Although Roberts availability for work only three days a week due to a growing private law practice in Chadron, Neb. virtually eliminated her from consideration as chief judge, did not appear as a negative in her potential role as a tribal attorney.

Getting late in the day and with no other candidates in attendance to interview for the eastern side of Pine Ridge Reservation associate judge, the council voted 13-0 with two not voting to accept Steve Emery as an associate judge for the Oglala Sioux Tribal Court.

"For the youth, I would really like to make a difference," said Steve Emery, "I have worked for Dakota Plains for the last two years with a number of juvenile cases and that's where I would really like to make an impact."

Juanita Scherich made a motion to advertise the chief of police position with the OST Department of Public Safety, seconded by Garfield Steele and it was passed 12-0 with two not voting.

Congresswoman Stephanie Herseth made a special presentation to the council to talk about relations between the tribe and the federal government, about economic development, health care, tribal gaming, education, elders, wind energy and methamphetamines.

Council representatives expressed concern about the Bureau's roadblocks to the tribe's wind energy plans, wanted to know about investment in education, resources for health care and the state's unwillingness to negotiate in good faith a fair gaming compact.

The council was to continue Tuesday and Wednesday in Porcupine, return the following Tuesday for the hearing for Big Crow and have a special session to deal with economic and business development committee issues on Feb. 1.

Henry "Clyde" Red Shirt dies at age 70

PINE RIDGE - Henry "Clyde" Red Shirt, age 70, died at the Ft. Meade Medical Center in Sturgis on January 22 of natural causes. Red Shirt was a Korean War veteran having served in the U.S. Army. He lived most of his life on the Pine Ridge reservation, having served for a time as an Oglala Sioux Tribal judge. He also lived for a time in the 1960's in Casper, WY.

Wake services for Red Shirt will be held at 1:00 p.m. on Saturday, Jan. 28 at the Billy Mills Hall in Pine Ridge. A second night wake will be held at 1:00 p.m. on Sunday, Jan. 29 at Red Shirt School. Funeral services will be held at 11:00 a.m. on Monday January 30 at Red Shirt School. Rev. Webster Two Hawk, Sr. will officiate with burial at the Christ Church Episcopal Cemetery in Red Shirt.

Valandra to retire after 16 years

Brule, Buffalo, Charles Mix, Jones and Lyman.

"Because we've been redistricted, I'm retiring," announced state representative Paul Valandra. Valandra is the dean of Native American Legislators. He has served eight years in the South Dakota senate and eight in the house, for a total of 16 years. Only the late Dick Hagen served longer. "We need to get fresh new folks in the legislature," concluded Valandra.

He did not agree with ACLU's redistricting suits. Instead of the 65 percent Native population required for pre-clearance under Federal law to develop new districts 27 and 26-a, he felt ACLU should have pushed for at least 70 percent native population. He pointed out that only in recent years have reservations began to register and vote in large numbers. "This was at least partially due to the millions of dollars pumped in by the Democratic candidates and non-partisan tribal voter organizations the past two election cycles, due to the tight Johnson-Thune and Daschle-Thune races.

"This year with no major statewide races, are our people going to vote or revert to their earlier patterns. If they do revert, we may actually lose tribal representation for our people. Also, I do not believe it was a good idea to split up Pine Ridge and Rosebud into two separate districts. Our two tribes need to work more closely together," said Valandra.

Valandra is a quiet, unassuming representative and former senator. Some of his detractors, Indian and whites, accuse him of becoming one of the, "Good Ol' Boys." However, it is the good ol' boys who run the legislature. Being accused of being one of them may well make Valandra's behind the scenes low key style quite effective.

This style has already been helpful in lining up support for the Tribal College Bill. While senators Two Bulls, Adelstein, and Dempster will co-sponsor the bill, Valandra's behind the scenes lobbying and educating the respective senators has much to do with their sponsorship.

In addition to his 16 years in representing Pine Ride and Rosebud in the state legislature, Paul has long worked for both tribes. He was born in 1953 and bounced around the world with his military family.

His father, a US Airborne paratrooper, was stationed in Ft. Bragg, N.C., Ft. Campbell, Ky..; and France. As a child, Paul learned French while his dad was stationed in France. He still speaks some French today.

He returned to Rosebud at age 13 and graduated from Todd County High School. He volunteered and served in the marines, rising to Sargeant in the mid seventies. Following his military service, he served as a counselor at Oglala Lakota College. He took some courses at OLC and later enrolled at Black Hills State University and the University of South Dakota. In 1984, he was elected to the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council. He later worked for RST's JTPA program and is currently a faculty member at Sinte Gleska University's Scott Bordeaux Leadership Institute teaching American Government. He has a small ranch outside of Mission and owns the "Eight Mile Road" trailer court in Mission. Paul has four grown children: Elijah, who lives in Mission, Teri and Rachel, who are attending Dakota Wesleyan University in Mitchell and Sarah, who is attending culinary school in Sioux Falls.

When asked what was his greatest legislative accomplishment, he stated it was getting the racist Blashfield Mural at the entrance to the Governor's office covered. The press claimed that then Governor Janklow agreed to cover it after being embarrassed by a Rosebud elder. Paul felt that story peddled by the press was simply to provide Janklow some cover.

"The real reason he backed down was because of the activism of the OLC students who came to the Capital repeatedly in large numbers to protest. CNN was covering the confederate flag protest as a symbol of racism in the South. Janklow got wind that they were coming to South Dakota to give national coverage to the racist mural. That's the real reason he backed off and it was the OLC student activism that led to the legislation to cover the mural. It was my honor to support them," he concluded.

When asked what was his greatest disappointment he stated, "While the mural is covered, it is still there".

He did not agree with Tom Shortbull that nothing of significance for Native Americans has been accomplished in the state legislature. "I was first elected to the senate in 1990 the same year as senator Rounds. We became good friends. He is like night and day compared to Janklow. If you work quietly with him and his staff much can be accomplished. In addition to changing the tone of the dialogue and demonstrating true respect to tribal initiatives, the Governor has delivered.

For example, the late Dick Hagen, he and others worked annually to support a nursing home on one of the reservations. The passage of the bill in Hagen's name to provide $500,000 toward a pilot nursing home on CRST is significant.

"In the early nineties, the balance of power was much closer. From 1993-1995 we even had a majority of Democrats in the senate. That majority made legislation like the tribal college bills, at $50,000 passed annually for three successive sessions possible. Unfortunately, Janklow never allowed any of these funds to be dispersed. These days we have to find friends on the other side of the aisle to move our agenda forward. Governor Rounds, Senator Adelstein, and others would certainly qualify as among these Republican allies," he said.

Ordinance 05-32 has directed all calls from Bennett, Jackson and Shannon counties to the Porcupine Dispatch center. The ordinance also says that the communications center shall be provided with GPS locator ANI/ALI trunks to become Phase II wireless and mapping for the reservation. This will enable dispatch to find out where you are calling from. The trunks cost $1,500 per month for each of the four phone companies. This is where the $3.00 surcharge is applied as it helps to pay for the trunks so we can become Phase II. Dispatch also has its own phone bills to pay, as well as other associated costs.

OST-DPS feels that the people of the Pine Ridge reservation deserve the same quality of service as non-Indians off the reservation. The dispatchers entered into an estimated 70,000 calls for service from Jan. 2005 to Jan. 2006. The average number of calls per month to 911 dispatch average 400-700 calls.

Our OST-DPS tribal dispatchers have a very challenging job and it is proud to have the dispatch personnel and supervisors on board. Both OST ordinances 04-05 and 05-32 have helped to protect our tribal sovereignty.

The Lakota Film and Television Group is increasing its profile

RAPID CITY - The Lakota Film and Television Group is a new organization of Native American and non-Native professionals, businessman and politicians who are committed to building a better film industry in the state. The goal of the group is achieve a higher public profile, thus better access to film projects which may be shot in the state and local region.

Karla R. LaRive one of the spokespeople for the Lakota film group wrote, "The Lakota Film and Television Group is a collective of Native and non-Native people whose goals are to empower themselves in the film and television industry. The group has 30 plus members and meets once a month to network, share resources, ideas and artistry in order to gain higher profile for participating in film and television projects in the state." She LaRive of Studio West Management explained that she has been working closely with Moses Brings Plenty in advancing the film group. She said, "Moses' intent was to start a group that would look out for Native interests. It is a working name at this point. We need to expand the name to include different tribes." The Lakota Film group will be at the casting call for the movie "Imprint" and will be working with the Black Hills Film Resource Council to sign up actors, extras, directors and production personnel. She noted that Buzz Two Lance understands the organization well as far as its ideas and philosophy were concerned.

LaRive said that she and Brings Plenty have testified before the state's tribal-state relations committee on the need to elevate the profile of the Native film industry in the state. She said,"We rely on the talents of all people in South Dakota. The big interest is Native people. The state should not ignore this fact. We have made a lot of headway with the committees."

FEMA adding up storm damage

ABERDEEN (AP) - The Federal Emergency Management Agency has 17 field officers in South Dakota to verify damage reports from the November ice and snow storms.

Another 50 or so support people are processing the field officers' reports, said Dennis Lowery of FEMA's regional office in Denver.

The field work is expected to last well into February, but some federal money to replace damaged property is expected to begin flowing into South Dakota by the end of January, Lowery said. Preliminary estimates indicate $18 million in damages in 25 counties and two Indian reservations that were declared a disaster area.

FEMA will reimburse 75 percent of the cost of eligible damages, with the money funneled to the state.

There was not enough damage to private property to qualify for a federal disaster, Lowery said.

Our views

Success of our tribe is our family, community structures

The Lakota Country Times is committed to preserving and transmitting positive cultural values and behavior to the younger Lakota generations to come.

We have a viable and living culture that is still very much alive in the elders who are sometimes very articulate in their pleas and perspectives. We are fortunate that we have elders who will share in Lakota their fears and dreams.

The media, the schools, parents, and other role models are charged with the responsiblity of sharing positive and desirable values. When it comes to violence, drugs and drinking and other unacceptable behavior, it is a responsiblity that we all share in.

We need to find ways to inspire our youth and discourage them from engaging in such behaviors.

The answer may be in giving out good incentives to those who are striving to be good all around tribal citizens.

When we are informed about those things that are plaguing our communities, it is up to all of us to share in the solutions.

The schools should be dreaming up new lessons to expose children to excellent role models and careers which are exciting and within the grasp of all Lakota children. We really do need to improve the quality of life on the Rosebud and Pine Ridge reservations as we all live here and we are not going anywhere soon.

Frank King III wrote a 'forum' piece in the Rapid City Journal in which he says that violence is embedded in reservation life and that it is a slap in the face for those who are doing good to blame it on the system.

He says that if one commits a crime against a tribal member, then that person should be banished from the reservation. That is an excellent idea.

He also says that Lakota families need to take hold of their families and discipline them at a young age.

Finally, he writes that, "If anyone is killing our people, it's our own people. And we when we understand this and stop blaming others and stop playing victim, only then can we stand in true liberation."

In all the success of our tribe, is the success of our family structures and our communities and finding ways to strengthen them.

A racial incident: what would you do?

Dear Editor:

This happened to my daughter-in-law recently at a local grocery store here in Rapid City where she works. (I won't identify the store because this probably could have happened (and does happen) at any store here in Rapid City.)

My daughter-in-law is a cashier, a very good one, with several years of experience and a very professional attitude, though she is only 21.

They love her at the store because she always has a big smile and can bag really quickly on her own. Customers are served, out of the store and on their way with little delay.

She is however, the only Indian cashier.

Two men, dressed in cowboy hats and western clothing, deliberately chose her line to pay for their items. There were three other cashiers working, but these cashiers were about three or four checkstands away from her.

My daughter-in-law immediately smiled and asked them if they found everything they needed, as she always does.

One (white) man remarked, "look, they let wild Indians work here." My daughter in law was upset, but continued to smile and remain professional, scanning their items. She told them how much they owed, while the other white man remarked, "look she even knows how to count!"

The first cowboy threw down a $20 bill, which the moving rubber counter immediately swept under the counter.

She found it and picked up the $20, rang up their purchases and proceeded to try to give them their change. The first white man refused to let her put the change in his hand, telling her he didn't want her to touch him. He told her to put it on the counter. She then put the money down on the counter, still smiling like a professional, and the two men grabbed their change and walked away, calling her names which I can't even type for you, but I am sure you can imagine...

The man behind these two @#$%@!! noted to my daughter-in-law how rude these men were. She agreed and still held her head high, smiled, and served the rest of her customers before asking someone for some time to go to the break room, where she proceeded to cry her eyes out.

She called her mother, who of course (as I would say the same thing) told her to leave, no job is worth that kind of humiliation. But my daughter in law is a professional, she has integrity, and she didn't want to leave her employer shorthanded or leave the job in such a bad way. She wanted to stay and finish her shift, so her mother told her to go tell the shift manager.

The shift manager was very surprised and I believe upset for her also. Not one of the other checkers or the manager were aware this had happened.

They immediately instructed her she had the right to refuse service to those men at that time, and refuse in the future if they came in again. They instructed her to turn off her light, refuse service, and call the manager and/or security. They did allow her to go home early. Still, my daughter-in-law is reconsidering whether a job at that grocery store is worth it.

When my daughter-in-law told me we both cried. It still makes me cry to think that our children can still be treated like this, in 2006, here in Rapid City!

I know there are other instances...I have heard...Racism and prejudice are alive and well here in Rapid City.

We need to encourage and teach our children not only how to hold their heads up high with integrity and pride in heritage, but also how to utilize every available process to address these situations immediately. My daughter-in-law and my boys are all pretty vocal and speak up when they see someone being treated wrong. But when this type of thing is perpetrated upon you, and in public, and at work, what do you do? What if you get fired because you did something about it?

We also need to encourage others to speak up when they see someone suffering racial slurs and recriminations. (Like the man standing behind these guys!) And if they are too afraid to speak up, at least go tell someone in charge!

Please pass this around to everyone you can. And send your suggestions or comments to me, especially encouraging ones - I would like to show them to my daughter-in-law!

It's a powerful experience to pray in the Lakota language

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

In Lakota life, when you ask someone to offer a prayer, protocol says that everyone should extend honor to that person. Duwe Lakol wicokan e t i k i y e wocekiya usipi, hantas he wicasa ki iyuha g l u o n i h a n p i waste.

It is a powerful experience to be able to pray in Lakota, as the ability to do that is diminishing just a little. Lakota un wocekiya oyakihi hantas he lila wasake. Lehan ota hecun unkokipsni. We should not have to be told that we need to treat that person with genuine respect. When one offers an invocation he or she is speaking on behalf of the people. It is an honor for them to represent the people before tunkasila. Duwe Lakol wacekiyapi cansna oyate eyuha wacecunkiciciyapelo.

It is one of those unwritten rules that Lakota people adhere to, but in this newer age people simply choose to ignore such cultural rules. One time when in 1977 (Not that good of a memory) I interrupted a conversation by Bill Schweigman and Stanley Red Bird, Sr. to ask a definition of a word and I learned a cultural rule right then.

I could hear Mr. Scheigmann tell Stanley in Lakota that if one wants to learn a Lakota word, protocol dictates that you sit and listen and learn.

That was a cool lesson for me, as it taught me not only to respect them as elders, but also not to be interrupting. I wrote about that experience during my first semester at Harvard University in a class called 'ethnography' and the professor thought it was noteworthy.

Ehani, 1977 hehan c'ele, Bill Schweigmann nahan Stanley Red Bird woglakahanp. Slolowasni ca,oglanaka wiyunge wanji wahotin.

Hecamu ca Schweigmann ki, lesto; duwa Lakota wicoiye sloliye cin, hantas owanjiyankapi nahan anagohptan yankapi hantas hecela Lakota unspekiyapikte.

We often hear of a sacred circle or hoop in Lakota life that includes all the people.

Some say that if anyone within that circle is absent, saddened or abused then the rest of the circle is able to share in their loss. The circle is a powerful way to explain the connection that the people have to each other. As each of us is able to think about our relatives, past and present, we can see how that circle widens.

The belief in a continuing hocoka is a view that many Lakota work to understand and see its relevance. Many of those who practice Lakota spirituality already know of its existence and importance to Lakota people.

It is crucial to think of how this connection encircles each of us in order for us to feel apart of it. Some who do not put much stock in its relevance to daily life seem to be the ones who choose to ignore its cultural application.

So, when we ask Lakota people of offer up prayers or do an invocation, it is culturally inappropriate to criticize them in other settings or work together to negatively impact their lives or their family.

For example, you can see how such negativity impacts a father who is trying to lead his family. If a father is somehow impacted then it filters down to his family and affects their quality of life.

We have to conclude then, that not everyone believes in the 'circle' as central to Lakota life. That leads us to think that either they are not Lakota or Lakota in their belief systems even though they may work amongst us.

The 'circle' is an enduring concept that is simple in its design, but as a cultural symbol it unites those who believe in like ways.

Hocoka ki Lakol wicohan hetan han. Duwa hecunse iyukcan hantas he lila wasake. Duwa hocoka opa cansna he ungluonihanpi waste.

Congrats! To President Lionel R. Bordeaux for celebrating 35 years at Sinte Gleska University. Tahansi Lionel will host a number of Lakota nations during the SGU Founders Day celebration and it should be a grand event. I was proud to do my part for 20 years and utilize my credentials to further SGU's university status.

I look forward to the next generation of young Lakota people to lead in educating the people of the Rosebud.

We need more of our own to lead our own, as Lionel has, and help future generations to foster a greater degree of self-determination.

Waniyetu ota owayawa wankatuya ki he oinitacan ca le anpetu ki ungluonihanpi.

The need for accurate journalism

Dear Editor:

Change! This seems to be the battle cry of a majority of the Oglala Lakota adversely affected by the aspects of poverty and dysfunctional tribal government. The solution to correcting this appears in the form of a double-edged sword. The need to implement change is more than evident, however, there are those from the "old guard" who are content to just maintain the status quo.

When the media enter the fray, it makes a tough job ten times harder. I have always asked of this current administration to put their self-centered thinking aside and to focus on the big picture. In my mind I'm not asking for too much, but I might as well be asking for the moon

Respecting elders should be taught as a traditon in all families

By Patty Pourier

Lakota culture has a wonderful tradition of respecting elders. So what does that mean, "respecting elders".

I grew up in a white middle class child in a racially mixed community of Martin. As a child, I was taught that children should be seen and not heard. I was taught not to "back talk" to my parents or teachers. I have friends that address elders formally with, "Mr. or Mrs.". I have a nephew (who's dad is from Texas) that addresses elders "Sir and Ma'am".

I attend a church where the Ten commandments are taught, "Honor your father and your mother" being one of them. However, every second Sunday is potluck, and all the children rush to the front of the line, college kids go next, followed by young adults and middle aged and dead last are the gray haired grandmas and grandpas, some of which are barely able to walk. I have attended countless gatherings on the Pine Ridge Reservation, and I cannot remember a time the elders did not eat first.

I was fortunate enough to see elder respect, in the traditional Lakota way, in action at the Bennett County Nursing Home last week.

My Grandma has been in the facility for about five years. She suffers from Alzheimer's. The disease has changed her personality from a soft, kind, reserved, proper school teacher type to a feisty, naughty, sometimes, old person. She has not known anyone for quite some time.

Taking care of her has become more and more difficult, as her personality has become more difficult and her body gives up. She has relied on the staff and my Aunt Nadine to keep her fed and bathed. These two basic tasks, I take for granted, have become monumental tasks with Grandma.

Last week when I was there, the staff tried to move her and she yelled, "How can you be so mean, that hurts!"

And yet, the two Lakota women, who moved Grandma to the recliner so they could change her bed, were kind, and gracious with their care. One of them called her Miss Fosse, which was her maiden name over 60 years ago.

It was an enduring name; respecting the fact Grandma's mind is sometimes living in the time warp of over 60 years ago. I am sure, it was difficult many times to treat Grandma the way the two women did, as she has become very difficult over the years.

It wasn't just Grandma the staff was respectful to; it was the rest of the residents as well.

It seemed to make no difference if the person was Native, or Norwegian, male or female, capable of walking or bed ridden, the respectful treatment was given to all, equally. Both Lakota and non-Indian staff members seemed to work together with unity.

In contrast, my Uncle Jim, who also in the same nursing home, is 90 years old and can still play cards. So, I assume he has most of his mind. He takes all of his meals in his room. When asked why, he told me it is because he does not want to eat with a bunch of Indians.

I am ashamed of his response.

I salute the staff at Bennett County Nursing Home and give them my heartfelt thanks for the thankless job they do day and night.

I think "respecting elders" should be taught as a tradition in every family, no matter what you ethnicity might be.

Notes From Indian Country

When did politics and religion become one?

By Tim Giago

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

When I was young and living on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation at the Pejuta Haka (Medicine Root) Community my father said to me, "There are two arguments you will never win and they are about politics and religion." Never in my wildest dream did I ever think that in the 21st Century those two arguments would be reduced to one. It seems to me that today politics and religion are interchangeable.

From the history books I learned that in years past nations were ruled by Popes and great battles were fought between Christians and Muslims. Now let me see; on which side were the infidels? No matter how it is sugar-coated, there is still a war going on between Christians and Muslims.

One would be a fool to believe that the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan are political wars only. It seems that the enemy of the Americans is using religious battle cries of Jihad or God is Great before pulling the switch on their suicide belts. Their martyrdom opens the gates of Heaven to them immediately.

And yet the reasons the suicide bombers kill and maim are firmly rooted in politics because, in their minds, religion and politics cannot be separated. In the lands where Mullahs rule, the politics of the nation are solidly based upon religious beliefs. In other words, the laws of politics are the laws of the Quran.

Ironically, in America, we now are faced with a leadership that leans heavily upon religious convictions when making political decisions. President George W. Bush publicly flaunts his deep religious feelings perhaps assuming that all Americans believe exactly as he feels. And once again we are observing the infringement upon the rights of individuals by those who believe that the laws of the land should be based upon the laws of the Bible. Should our laws be based on the Bible just as the laws of Islam are based upon the Quran?

Even in a sparsely populated state like South Dakota the religious right has assumed control of the legislative body and too often inserts its religious opinions into legal or political decisions. In America a "red state" can be labeled as "God fearing," while a "blue state" can be accused of being "Godless." When did this Nation come to this ridiculous condition?

History tells us that the Indian people of the Southwest, the Pueblo, were deeply religious, but it was the wrong kind of religiosity. It wasn't Christian enough. The Spanish conquistadors murdered, maimed and indoctrinated those who did not embrace Catholicism.

The Pueblo men and women were reduced to slavery while their children were forced into schools where their language and customs were beaten out of them, or so the conquerors believed. But some religious beliefs die hard, and the people of the Pueblos kept their spiritual beliefs underground until it was safe to bring them into the light.

What happened to the indigenous people of the Western Hemisphere should be used as a lesson to the rest of America. The new religious leaders scoffed at their spiritual beliefs and forced conversion became the law of the land.

One of the fastest growing religions with the youngest population now thrives in the Muslim world. They believe their religion is the only true religion. Sound familiar? They believe it is not only all right, but a religious duty for young Muslims to sacrifice their lives to kill non-believers.

Sixty years ago the Americans first encountered those who believed it was their religious responsibility to crash their planes into the war ships off the coast of Okinawa. The word Kamikaze literally means "Divine Wind." It was perplexing to the ideologies of the Americans then and it is perplexing to the Americans of today.

Americans are not trained by religion or politics to take their own lives to destroy an enemy. It is a totally foreign concept. Muslims are taught at a very young age that martyrdom is a state of honor.

To read a newspaper today or watch a television newscast creates an almost surreal world. The suicide attacks upon Iraqi civilians and upon American soldiers seem to run together so that it is hard to separate one attack from the other. And of late the attacks are becoming too numerous to register as real. But from the photos of the burned out cars and mangled bodies, we know that they are only too real.

When American politicians decided to tackle the Muslim world they grabbed a tiger by the tail and now they cannot decide how to let go. If they let go too soon the tiger will surely kill them.

Unforeseen circumstances have turned Iraq and Afghanistan into religious wars. After all, weren't the Taliban Muslim fundamentalists?

My father could never have known that when he advised me many years ago to never argue politics or religion that they would eventually become one and the same.

Councilman responds

for all the good it does.

What is responsible journalism? Is it unbiased? Is it fair? Do you present both sides or do you just make things up as you go along depending on your own personal views? How much of a story is dictated by the writers own ulterior motives? Or most accurately, what is the writer's personal stake in the story? Is he/she contributing to the well being of the people?

Or are they forsaking accurate journalism to take the opportunity to appear holier than thou to bash the truth and replace it with outright lies? Is this done unknowingly? Or is it done with purpose?

A good case in point, Tim Giago's version of what transpired is the impeachment proceeding of president Fire Thunder.

Well first of all, the man was not physically there, how can you presume to make the readers think that they are getting an eye witness account? Looking at that simple fact, one can only assume that the article was written on here-say.

If he were actually there, he would have seen that it was not Webster Poor Bear's presence that was being questioned, but rather his brother, Councilman Tom Poor Bear. I have known these twobe like many of us, warriors for the people, enough said.

If Mr. Giago were actually there, he would have seen that it was not a council representative who made the argument that argument came from the complaintant, William Bird Necklace.

On a sad note, the "dragging on for no apparent reason" as Mr. Giago so ignorantly termed it, was so that we could hear from the Lakota elders, we have every reason to listen to our elders, and they are the keepers of the wisdom and truth. For that, I believe Mr. Giago owes the elderly an apology.

As for the "serious connotations to tribal government," come now sir, get real, I can't believe you even went there. I am not going to even try to enlighten you.

These things you should already carry in your heart, if you are indeed what you present yourself to be. Lakolya Ta Chunku Luta Wasunspewicakiya emaciyapi, nis, taku eniciyapi hwo?

Now I know you know your Lakota name, but what is the essence of the person carrying that name? One with such a name should not be so out of touch with his people.

And finally, if indeed Mr. Giago took a little more time to research his topic, he would have found that the complaint I presented had indeed gone through the process laid forth by the rules of impeachment in accordance with the relevant tribal ordinance. In short, all the I's were dotted and all the T's were crossed. I will supply you sir, the document pertaining to the rules of impeachment and you will see that I was without a doubt legitimate in my actions. I did not make these rules sir, but I try to follow them even though I know that many do not.

To term the action as "ridiculous" is just a smart man's way of using his intelligence to assist those whose only concern is to maintain the negative status quo which enjoys political power and access to Tribal funds. However, what is ridiculous beyond belief is the fact that there has been corruption associated with tribal government for decades now. If one is in touch with his people, then he knows this.

What truly saddens me is in this case, is Mr. Giago's frivolous and inaccurate reporting of the facts. I once admired this man, now he stands as a question mark. As I reflect on Mr. Giago, I recall that he once made a good challenge to the late governor George Mickelson. Now I wonder, is this man as good at accepting challenges as he is at issuing them?

If so, then on behalf of the Lakota Oyate and the true integrity of tribal government, I now bring forth a "good challenge" of my own.

I challenge you Sir, as though I was staking myself to Unci Maka, to meet me face to face. Sit down with me in a good way and let me discuss and show you, that of which I speak. After which, we will see you and I as Lakota are up to the greater challenge of stopping corruption so that our people will live a better life.

Stopping corruption is the single hardest task adversely affecting our people now. Many good Lakota people have tried, and many have failed.

So I challenge you Sir to walk with me, I pray that your heart is as strong as mine for I love my people. In the end, let us see if we are both worthy of being called Lakota. Ta Chunku Luta Waunspewicakiya he miyelo, hece tu welo!

And oh, the 666 thing, teach me about that, for my spiritual beliefs do not cover that. Show me what 666 means, if it means something to do with wakan sica, I think I can help you see were it truly lays. Are you up for the challenge?

Return of the sacred calf Pipe to be discussed on Feb. 3

Dear Editor:

When "Pte San Win" brought the buffalo calf pipe bundle to the "Itacipa Cola" band of the Lakotas she gave specific instructions only to pray to Tunkasila to stop the worst of anything that will cause destruction to the natives of this country. Even the present buffalo calf pipe keeper does not know this as well as all of the natives so they misused this very sacred ceremony in performing marriages, naming ceremonies, even praying for snow for the skiers, sweat lodges, world peace, churches and worst of all, praying for bad things to happen to someone. These are not the intent of the buffalo calf pipe.

My reason for writing about this important sacred ceremony is there are some bad things coming to our people and if we cant do anything to stop it then everyone will suffer. When something really bad is happening to us what are we going to do? Let our people die? When "Peta San Win" brought the bundle, she gave seven special instructions of praying with the pipe and seven instructions of life. I know the present buffalo calf pipe keeper does not know the instructions and now it is time to return the buffalo calf pipe to the original band of the Lakotas, the "Itacipa Cola."

The Lakotas have a traditional law that when a woman marries into another band of natives, her children and herself will become members of those natives.

Our grandfathers made this traditional law before the white man's law was brought to us, the buffalo calf pipe bundle was brought to us before the white man came and this traditional law will be one of the most important issues before the Lakotas. Whether we honor and respect our grandfathers law depends on whether we honor and respect ourselves. I know returning the sacred buffalo calf pipe bundle to the Itacipo Cola will be very hard to do because it has become his livelihood and he will not give up easy.

Chief Arvol Looking Horse has been misleading everyone about his role as the keeper of pipe and to those that doesn't speak or understand the Lakota language and doesn't know the Lakota traditions and customs, you would believe him and become one of his followers. It is now the time to really see him as the person who took advantage of the situation.

As a member of the Itacipa Cola band, I am requesting other members to discuss the return of the sacred buffalo calf pipe bundle to the Itazipa Cola on Febuary 3, 2006. Beginning at 1:00 p.m at the H.V. Cultural Center in Eagle Butte, SD. Agenda: Roles and Responsibilities of the keeper

WAGNER (AP) - Barring a last-ditch effort, Wagner's Indian Health Service emergency room will become an urgent care clinic at the end of the month, no longer operating overnight.

It's a move that many Yankton Sioux tribal members say will cost lives.

It also could inundate the ER at nearby Wagner Community Memorial Hospital, as IHS patients seek treatment there during the nighttime hours.

The Indian Health Service ER has survived two deadlines in the past four months - one on Oct. 1, the beginning of the fiscal year, and another at the end of the calendar year. Both times, IHS extended the 24-hour service.

The effort to close the facility between 11 p.m. and 7 a.m. nightly and all day on Sunday is the latest in a decade-long dispute between the tribe and IHS over the Wagner Service Unit's ER.

In 1994, when the tribe won a permanent injunction in federal court requiring IHS to keep the facility open, Joyce Golus thought the ER was safe.

As tribal health director for the Yankton Sioux Tribe in 1994, Golus was the plaintiff named in the lawsuit the tribe brought against IHS and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services.

The word ``permanent,'' she said, is not as ironclad as it sounds.

The halls and offices and examination rooms of the Wagner Service Unit look much like those in any small-town hospital, a far cry from the stories of Third World health care that often echo from South Dakota's poorest reservations.

Many people in the community say IHS, the federal agency formed because of treaty obligations and charged with the medical care of the country's American Indians, is dangerously underfunded. One statistic, cited regularly in places such as Marty, where families gathered to watch junior high basketball games Thursday night, is that the federal government spends less per capita on Indians than it does on inmates.

Watching the game at Marty Indian School, Edith Fool Bull said she counted on the emergency room for asthma treatment for herself and her grandchildren.

``We're all kind of hoping that it won't happen,'' she said. ``I think after all these years, they might come up with something.''

Long-term struggle

The decision that has people here up in arms has been a source of frustration for years.

In 1994, Judge Lawrence Piersol's order forced IHS to keep Wagner's ER open until the agency submitted an impact report to Congress detailing the effects of closing. IHS submitted such a report in 1997. In 2004, IHS asked Piersol to lift the injunction, which he did.

That paved the way for IHS to cut the ER's hours, a decision that was based on an IHS-commissioned report conducted by health care consulting firm Sharpless Inc. That decision was to take effect Oct. 1, 2005, though a three-month extension and a one-month extension were granted to delay the deadline.

The same report that recommended the nighttime closure, though, also recognizes the importance of the ER.

``No one doubted that lives had been saved by virtue of the presence of the (ER), and with its potential closing, it could be forecast that lives would certainly be lost,'' the report's introduction said.

The report also finds overspending on employee overtime and other fiscal problems, ultimately recommending downgrading the ER to an urgent care clinic.

`For years, it was just catch as catch can to support this over a million-dollar service that wasn't paying for itself,'' said Nancy Davis, deputy director of Aberdeen Area IHS.

The cost of keeping the ER open, Davis said, is not in line with the services it provides.

``It was a 24-hour service, and they called it an emergency room, but the bulk of the patients ... did not fit the criteria for emergency,'' Davis said.

Funding flatlines

The tribe will not have its total appropriation cut, Davis said, but it will remain flat. The spiraling costs of health care mean that it's not possible to provide the same services with the same amount of money year to year. And without the burden of the 24-hour ER, the tribe would have more money to spend on other services.

``The care that was given late after hours was pretty minimal. They need to live within their appropriations,'' she said.

Charlie Abourezk, the Rapid City lawyer who represented the tribe in the 1994 lawsuit, says the appropriation is inadequate.

`Health care costs go up every year dramatically _ zero growth in your budget is a cut. That's why they had to partially close the emergency room,'' he said.

Glenn Drapeau, the tribe's health director, was thrust into a controversy that has been simmering since he was in high school.

``Finally,'' he said, ``it's a hot issue.''

He acknowledged that some tribal members sometimes seek emergency care when seeing a doctor in a clinic setting would be appropriate, but ``if an individual believes they have an emergency, they have a right to come,'' he said.

'Rather wait and die'

When the ER is closed, patients will be directed to Wagner Community Memorial Hospital, which has an emergency room, though it is not accredited at the same level as the IHS facility. Tribal members are reluctant to use the non-Indian hospital.

``Some people say they'd rather wait and die than go to the white hospital,'' said John Sully, the tribe's treasurer.

Jeremy Armstrong, Memorial's administrator, recognizes the often-tenuous relationship between the Indian and white populations here, where the two communities are bound by geography and often, it seems, little else.

``Maybe there is more of a cultural tendency for Native Americans'' to use the ER, Armstrong said.

``We would prefer that the non-emergent cases be treated in the clinic setting,'' he said, but he stressed that every patient who comes in would be assessed on an equal basis.

According to Davis, IHS only pays third-party claims for the most serious cases, when a failure to treat will result in the loss of life, limb or sense.

Armstrong estimates visits to the Memorial ER will increase 325 percent overnight when the IHS ER becomes an urgent care clinic. And few of those visits will be reimbursed by IHS.

`It could run into the hundreds of thousands of dollars. It all depends on how many people show up at the ER to be treated,'' Armstrong said.

Memorial might be able to recoup some unpaid hospital bills through Charles Mix County, which provides what Armstrong calls county poor relief, though he said he hadn't yet worked out the details of that.

`They're afraid of nonpayment,'' Drapeau said. ``If it's after 11 p.m., everybody they see is the potential for nonpayment.''

Washington help

Sen. John Thune has been vocal about his desire to keep the ER open at night. He submitted last-minute legislation that would have allowed IHS to move $500,000 from another part of the Service Unit's budget.

But the tribe's leaders, Drapeau said, decided that accepting that temporary solution wasn't in their best interest. The tribe would have been left with the bill for any spending on the ER above $500,000. With three quarters left in the fiscal year, and a cost of about $330,000 per quarter to keep the ER open, it was a risk the tribe couldn't afford, Drapeau said.

In what might amount to the last real chance to keep the ER open at night, Thune last week wrote a letter to Dr. Charles Grim, director of IHS in Washington, asking that a new impact report be required because circumstances today are changed from 1997, when the previous court-ordered report was conducted.

``The clear intent behind the law requires a current assessment of the impact of any closure or partial closure,'' Thune wrote.

Stephen Cournoyer, the tribe's vice chairman, is watching from the sidelines this time. Cournoyer was the chairman when the tribe fought this fight and won, more than a decade ago. That, he thought, was the end of it. Hearing about the issue on the street and around the tribal headquarters in Marty is a daily exercise in frustration and deja vu.

``Maybe it's going to take some new people being involved,'' he said.

When the permanent injunction was lifted in 2004, Cournoyer essentially washed his hands of the matter. Too much of his own heart had been poured into it a decade ago, he said.

``I've been there too long. I'm tired of spinning my wheels,'' he said.

``Our ancestors took the government at their word,'' he said. The treaties, he said, promised them health and education forever.

``The grass continues to grow, and the river continues to flow,'' he said. ``We didn't trade 11 million acres for this.''

Falcons pick up fourth win in OT

Mustangs prepare for defending DOC title with wins at Red Cloud and Eagle Butte

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

MISSION/PINE RIDGE/EAGLE BUTTE - After six straight losses, Todd County has come back and put two quality wins together out of the last three games with the most recent being an overtime win 61-57 at home on Saturday against Crow Creek. Todd County beat McLaughlin 71-68 and lost to Lyman 58-51.

Crow Creek led the entire first half, Todd County tied it up at the end of the third and behind Gunner Krogman's game high 16 points, the Falcons broke it open in the over time period to pick up their third win of the season. Steve Antoine helped with 10 and Mark Dubray chipped in nine. Isaiah Kirkie led Crow Creek with 14 while Winston Dion had 12.

Todd County is now 3-10 on the season and will host Winner on Tuesday and Stanley County on the following Tuesday. Crow Creek got by Flandreau Indian on Saturday for their third win, they are now 3-5 on the season and open the Dakota Oyate Challenge on Wednesday against Lac Courte Oreille from Wisconsin.

Little Wound has only two losses this season, both at the hands of Pine Ridge; after the second loss, the Mustangs traveled to Red Cloud Tuesday and got strong games from Rich Big Boy and Brice Hornbeck and defeated Red Cloud for the second time this year, 69-56. Big Boy's eight points in the first quarter and Hornbeck's six pushed Little Wound to a 20-12 first quarter lead, a lead they tenaciously held onto for the duration of the game.

RST legal counsel leaving the Rosebud

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Steve Emery, legal counsel for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, has been busy since 2001 dispensing legal advice to the Sicangu people, and at the same time, connecting with his Sicangu relations. He is now leaving RST to go to work on the Standing Rock reservation. Emery, a 1989 graduate of the Harvard Law School in Cambridge, Mass. has also gained prominence on the northern plains for his music talents in Lakota and English.

His employment brought him to Sinte Gleska University in January 2001 after having served as the Attorney General for the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe from 1989 to 2000. He served as the director of the Sicangu Policy Institute and the Vice President for Business at SGU and said, "I left because I wanted to continue my work as a lawyer. I was especially please to work with the Lakota Studies Department. I knew Fred and Doris Leader Charge and was saddened at their passing."

In November 2004, he began his work as legal counsel for the Rosebud Sioux Tribe and could often be heard in tribal council proceedings giving his legal opinion on an issue directly impacting the tribe. He is proud of several cases in which he represented RST and listed those as the Rosebud highway case, the motor vehicle tax case, and the liquor case.

At Cheyenne River, Emery successfully argued several cases on behalf of the tribe involving hunting and fishing, the Homestake Mining, Co. and a case against the U. S. Secretary of Agriculture, Mike Espy.

Of his professional work in the area, he said, "It has been a marvelous opportunity to work here. The elders have

SGU's 36th Annual Founders' week offers $30,000 in prize money

ROSEBUD- Sinte Gleska University's 36th Annual Founders' Week Celebration is shaping up to be as successful as past celebrations with more than $30,000 in prize money at the Tribal Nation-Building Wacipi and Celebration and a full week of community planning and events scheduled for the friends and members of the Sicangu Oyate.

SGU President Lionel R. Bordeaux is leading the planning committee and continues to work toward the development of a Sicangu Nation Plan for the Future. President Bordeaux has led the process of developing this plan for the past years through community public forums, work with tribal government officials and council members, and through teaching of the students at the University to help envision the future of the Sicangu (Burnt Thigh Band) Lakota Oyate (Nation).

"Each year we move a step closer to knowing where we want to go and in developing a collective vision so we can ensure our tribal people and our culture will continue to be here 1000 years from now," said Bordeaux. "As in past years, this year we will ask our community to come and work with us to move the work a little further along."

"It is a continuous struggle to work toward a common voice in addressing all areas affecting the quality of our daily lives," said Bordeaux, who was recruited by SGU Founder, the late Stanley Red Bird, Sr., to lead SGU, and to specifically address the preservation of culture; the redefining and restructuring of education on the Rosebud through tribal customs and law, especially the development of our own accreditation system; a working relationship between education and economic development which includes economic education at all grade levels; and the development of an alternative form of tribal government, one based upon the treaty, for spiritual and ancestral strength

Big Boy had 21 points and 12 rebounds while Hornbeck helped with 15 points and five rebounds. Michael Apple was also in double figures with 14 points along with Devon LeBeau who helped with 10. Red Cloud was led by Johnny Crow who had 17 points and four rebounds.

Little Wound took on Cheyenne Eagle Butte on Saturday in Eagle Butte and after building a 16-10 first quarter lead, increased the lead each quarter and finished with an 82-57 victory to move their season record to 7-2.

Balanced scoring was the theme of the day as Willie Zephier led the way with 18, Devon LeBeau hit five threes and finished with 17, Big Boy helped with 16 points and seven rebounds, Hornbeck had 10 and Ty Lunderman, in his second game back finished with 10 points.

Daelan High Wolf scored 29 points and once again led his team in rebounding grabbing nine while Beau Kingfisher threw in 12. CEB is now 4-11 and travels to winner on the 27th.

Little Wound will be in Huron on Wednesday to defend their DOC championship and will play Walt Hill in a first round game.

Pine Ridge lambasted Lead-Deadwood on Thursday for their sixth win of the year as Jeff Big Crow had his best game of the year with five threes and 20 points, Michael Jack helped wqith 11 points and JC Dillon added 10.

Big Crow had another strong game on Saturday at the Dakota Valley Classic against Hinton, IA but it just wasn't enough as Hinton beat Pine Ridge 63-52. The Thorpes kept it close for three quarters but Hinton pushed out into the lead for good in the fourth quarter. Big Crow finished with 23 while Ryan Pourier added 10.

Red Cloud bounced back in the winning column on the road in Alliance, knocking off the Bulldogs 73-67. After playing good team ball, moving it around well and going up by 12 in the first half, Red Cloud saw Alliance chip away at their lead in the third closing the gap to 51-50 to start the fourth. Alliancxe put Red Cloud on the free throw line and the Crusaders came through hitting 11 of 12 in the fourth quarter and preserving a 73-67 win over a double 'A' school.

Johnny Crow led the Crusaders with 18, Billy Scott hit six free throws down the stretch and finished with 14 and Christian McGhee and Lester Gotheridge both knocked down 16 a piece.

"This was a good win for us tonight," said Matt Rama, Red Cloud coach, "we played good defense, played with patience, did not panic when they made their run and came through in the clutch to get the win."

Red Cloud moves their record to 8-4, hosts Rapid City Christian on Thursday, the first of six straight home games, an historical first for Red Cloud.

Our Lady of Lourdes runs through Wolf Creek for fourth win of the season

WOLF CREEK - OLL opened the season at the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center with a 40 point win over Pine Ridge during the throwback night between OCHS and Holy Rosary and last night the story was the same as OLL raced through Wolf Creek 94-36 on Wolf Creek's home floor.

Brier Iron Cloud led the charge with 44 points, seven rebounds and six steals while his sidekick, Carl Swallow, tossed in 16 points with five rebounds, five assists, four steals and one blocked shot. Kylie Weston helped with 10 points but more importantly got seven assists, six rebounds and three steals. JD Plume scored nine points and led the team in boards, pulling down 12 and adding four steals; Truman Rossman came off the bench to contribute seven points, six steals, five rebounds and four blocked shots.

After taking third in last year's Big Foot Conference A tourney, losing to Pine Ridge in the semis, the team has been on a mission to win the conference this year. After participating in a preseason league at the YMCA in Rapid City this fall, the team has hit the ground running and hasn't stopped for anything.

"We ran and ran during the holidays," said head coach, Shane Clifford, "we developed as strong base or foundation and running is a big part of our game."

In addition to wins over Pine ridge and Wolf Creek, OLL has defeated Porcupine at home and Gordon-Rushville on the road. The Braves host Rockyford on Thursday and travel to American Horse on Feb. 1st.

Lady Falcons make it four straight

Little Wound adds an OT and road win as they head to Huron to defend their Dakota Oyate Challenge title

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

MISSION/KYLE/EAGLE BUTTE - After polishing off St. Francis 72-36 in the Rosebud Shootout, the Lady Falcons bombed Crow Creek 76-46 at home on Friday to move their record to 9-3. Todd County plays three road games this week, at Red Cloud on Tuesday, at Lyman on Thursday and down to Lake Andes on Saturday.

Although the three point shot is a strong part of their arsenal, the Lady Falcons used a strong transition game and an even stronger post game to streak by the Lady Chieftains, Friday. Tia McCloskey scored 15 points and grabbed 11 rebounds while Sunni Busch knocked down 29 points as the team shot 53 percent from the field.. Todd County did not hit a three but in turn held Crow Creek's super three point shooter, Ashley Ross to just two points and no threes.

Todd County also used balanced scoring and a domination of the boards to earn their ninth win of the season and fourth in a row; Mandi Morrisette hit for 12 and Summer Folkers added 10, Busch added seven boards, Folders six.

"We have had a tendency to look down the road and not pay attention to the game at hand," said Todd County coach, Chuck Wilson, "we need to go back to focusing on one game at a time."

After rolling to four straight wins, Little Wound hosted Pine Ridge on Friday in Kyle and despite 25 turnovers held on for a 73-63 overtime win. The Lady Mustangs traveled to Eagle Butte on Saturday and added a 60-34 win over the Cheyenne Eagle Butte Lady Braves.

Nichelle Red Owl, Little Wound's sophomore shooting guard, set the tone for the game as she hit three threes and a deuce in the first quarter as the Lady Mustangs went up 18-11. The two seniors, Sadie In The Woods with eight and Tyann Pourier with five points helped keep Little Wound up by 11 at the half 36-25.

Pine Ridge's Keisha Brewer and Lacey Brings Plenty Weston, two young girls who play extremely big helped Pine Ridge to start chipping away at the lead and it was down to five at the end of the third, 46-41. For the second game in a row, Christian Janis, an 8th grader at Pine Ridge, stepped it up, she hit eight of her ten points in the fourth quarter including a three with 20 seconds left in the game to tie it up 58-58 and send it into overtime.

The night before, Christian hit six free throws in the fourth quarter and came up with two steals to give the Lady Thorpes the edge at the finish as they squeaked out a 51-49 win over Lead-Deadwood.

In the Woods stepped up with seven of her 18 points in the OT period to lead the Lady Mustangs to the win - Sadie finished with 18 points, 18 rebounds, five assists, five steals and five blocked shots. Pourier led Little Wound with 1`9, Red Owl added 13 and Kelsey Brave Eagle helped with 11.

Brewer led the Lady Thorpes with 13 points and ten rebounds, Weston added 14 and nine boards and Janis helped with 10 points and six rebounds.

Led by Pourier and Red Owl who had five threes between them, Little Wound retook the momentum, outscoring Eagle Butte 20-4 in the fourth quarter and finishing with a 60-34 win over the Lady Braves for their tenth win of the season on Saturday on the road. Brittany Azure led CEB with nine.

Little Wound has put together six straight wins and opens the Dakota Oyate Challenge in Huron on Wednesday against Flandreau Indian JV as the number one seed and knows that it is a good possibility that they will play Pine Ridge in the championship game on Saturday night at the Huron Arena.

Pine Ridge hopes to use the DOC to get back on the winning track; after a close win over Lead-Deadwood and an overtime loss at Little Wound, the Lady Thorpes traveled to Vermillion for the Dakota Valley Classic and arrived cold and flat as they just could not get it going against Iowa power, Akron-Westfield losing it 78-51.

The Lady Thorpes are the number two seed in this year's DOC and face Walt Hill on Wednesday at the Huron Arena at 11:30am.

Red Cloud opened the week on the road at Hot Springs on Tuesday night and picked up just their third win of the season 67-46 over the Lady Bison. At 6-2, Hot Springs had just been mentioned in the honorable mention category of the top ten poll but Red Cloud was oblivious to the fact as they led at the end of each quarter and finished with four girls in double figures. Kristin Weston led the way with 16, Shaina Clifford helped with 12, Marissa O'Bryan chipped in 11.

The week got tougher for Red Cloud as they hosted fifth rated Bennett County on Thursday and lost 55-32. The Lady Crusaders finished off their week with a road loss to Alliance 56-33. Red Cloud's rough road continues this week as they host Todd County on Thursday and travel to Chadron on Saturday.

been loving and caring. Work gives me tremendous satisfaction. I try to learn something everyday. It is not up to anyone else to teach me how good to be at something." He also said, "I stay current by doing a daily West Law search to find out new developments involving Indian tribes."

He said in Lakota, "Oyate wawokiya waste walake ca hecamu" which translates to, "I like helping the people, that is why I do it."

Emery speaks fondly of his grandfather who gave him his Lakota name, Mato Tanka. His grandfather had killed a Kodiak grizzly bear on the Aleutian Islands off of Alaska which posed some danger to him. In Lakota life, confronting a bear and overcoming the threat is powerful.

Tribal nations are experiencing an onslaught by the federal and state governments, according to Emery and it is one of the reasons Native attorneys do not want to be involved in litigation.

He said, "In the last twenty years tribes have been the victims of judicial termination. Occasionally, we could count on Supreme Court justice Sandra Day O'Connor." He is afraid that anyone who is confirmed as the next sitting Supreme Court Justice will be much too conservative.

There are a couple of issues important to the Sicangu Nation that remain to be adopted, according to Emery that he would have like to have been apart of, and they include a version of the Uniform Commercial Code, and a garnishment ordinance. He said he was proud of his work in helping to bring a defense contract for $1.8 million to the Rosebud as well as taking a drug test with the past tribal president and current RST president, Rodney M. Bordeaux and passing it. He said, "Someone needs to set an example."

Emery says his hobbies are collecting old watches and writing and performing his music. He has published several Lakota recordings including, "Tunes From The Rez", "Tunes From The Rez II", and "Wanikiya Tonpi Anpetu T'olowan." Some of his more popular songs are regularly heard over KINI FM in St. Francis. During the holidays a couple of Emery's Christmas songs could be heard often to the enjoyment of the people, while his 'wakan cekiye olowan' are often played with memorial requests.

Infant mortality rate has risen in South Dakota

PIERRE (AP) - South Dakota's infant mortality rate is rising, according to state Health Secretary Doneen Hollingsworth, who gave an update to a legislative committee last week.

South Dakota's infant mortality rate rose in 2004 to 8.2 deaths per 1,000 live births. In 2003, the rate was 6.5 per 1,000 live births.

``We've got some further work that we need to do," Hollingsworth said.

``Unfortunately, we're heading in the wrong direction."

Laurie Gill, director of the health department's division of health and human services, said South Dakota is not doing as well as other states in the nation and that it needs to be addressed.

According to the Health Department, the main cause is inadequate prenatal care. The state medical association, Indian Health Services and the University of South Dakota medical school have formed a team to look into the issue further, Hollingsworth said. Eighty-nine 89 percent of South Dakota toddlers were up to date on standard immunizations in 2004, the department said.

That's the sixth-highest rate in the nation, Gill said.

and direction whereby the people through their communities and tiospaye can address more of their own situations."

"With an educator as our tribal president, Rodney Bordeaux, I feel we have the tribal officials and council to begin this process," Bordeaux continued. "Sovereignty needs education, and education needs sovereignty," he said.

"It was the dream of our founders that our University would be here to grow our leaders and to keep our culture intact," said Bordeaux. "If you look at the work SGU has done over the past 36 years you can see a clear path between the vision of our founders and what we continue to do today. That vision has never been lost, and we continue to follow the path that was laid out for us by our first leaders. From Chief Spotted Tail and our many leaders till now, we continue to try and maintain 'wolakota' as our path, difficult as everything is today," said Bordeaux.

The Founders' Week Celebration will begin Monday, Jan. 25, with a sunrise ceremony, followed by blessing of the building and grounds of the University and a Wiping of Tears ceremony for those who have lost loved ones over the past year.

The SGU faculty and staff will provide presentations about their departments, and a planning process for the next year will last throughout the day. Monday will also be the Miss SGU and the Ms. SGU Winyan Royalty Pageant to crown new SGU Royalty for 2006.

Monday evening SGU will host a Family Fun Night at the Wakinyan Wanbli Multipurpose Building from 6 to 9 p.m. which will include games, free-throw contests, prizes and dinner, and a Nintendo tournament for all ages.

Tuesday the University will continue its Tribal Nation Building Forums with the presentation of a land curriculum for educators by the Sicangu Policy Institute at SGU. Lunch will be served, followed by planning sessions for SGU and the community in conjunction with SGU staff, students and faculty.

Wednesday, Feb. 1, the University will continue forums to get feedback and input from the community towards the Sicangu Nation Plan for the Future.

Thursday the Forums will continue and SGU will host its annual Student/Staff/Alumni Appreciation Dinner.

Friday the University will continue with drafting a plan for the coming year with community input and kick off the wacipi with a community dinner served by SGU, a fashion show, and several special events at the wacipi. Handgames tournaments will begin Friday night as well as registration for the contest wacipi on Saturday and Sunday.

SGU hosts the annual Founders' Week Tribal Nation Building Wacipi and Celebration as a way to thank the community and our friends for their past year's support and to bring the reservation together to celebrate education, culture, history and the future. ASK ANNA

Dear Anna,

I am going to be in the hole here until I leave this place to go back to home which is in July, after reading all your predictions in the paper for everyone, I got curious and would like to know what you have to say about me?

Curious about my future.

Dear Curious:

I do see you going back to Kyle in July. I see that your family and friends are around you and helping you. I do see a young woman coming into your life. She is Lakota and has two children (there is a possibility that there may be three - because I see her with a very small infant - but that could be further in the future and that child could be yours). I do see you working in a large green tin building where heavy equipment is stored. I also see that there is a possibility that this building is in Wyoming.

Things will be different for you when you get home, but after your readjustment to your family and your healing of wounds I see you moving with your work.

Please stay clear of alcohol and drugs or the outcome is dismal and not as I have told you. If you follow that path you will leave home again, maybe to never return. Blessings to you and call me when you get home.

Dear Anna,

I enjoy reading your responses to the many dilemmas like those who address their concerns, I too would like to know what you see for me.

For a long time, as long as I can remember, I often have difficulty staying on task and completing projects. I am disorganized and struggle to maintain balance of being a mother of four, working full time, keeping my home decent.

My spouse and I read an article from a magazine about a mother who had Attention Deficient Disorder. He asked me if I might have ADD a after much thought I hate to admit but to realize that I might have attention deficit disorder.

I haven't been to a doctor to be formally diagnosed. I thought the ability to multitask came from being a mother but learned that people with ADD can't stay on task, their mind races and we try to do everything at once. I graduated with my bachelor's degree but with great difficulty. ADD women have severe PMS because they are already on an emotional roller coaster.

I had to come to grips and take a good look at reality, especially after one of my children asked why I am happy and sad again. The truth hurt me. The feelings of being inadequate and incomplete were too much to bear. My spouse has been supportive of everything I do and together we are seeking alternatives to medicine. ADD affects the whole family, who do you see that will help and benefit us all?

Maybe there are others who may have ADD and like haven't been able to put a name on their condition. These are the symptoms: impulsive, poor financial management, depressed and stressed out, inability to stay focused to name a few.

I have my own dreams I want to fulfill but realize I have to get ahold of t his condition. I have been screened for Post Traumatic Stress Disorder and have the symptoms for ADD and am at risk for becoming diabetic, having hypertension and heart disease because I am obese.

What do you see for me and my family? Are my dreams attainable or too far fetched?

Desire to change

Dear Desires to change:

Bless your heart. I too am ADD - Surprise! As a dietary supplement I have found that grape seed extract (tablets from the health store, please don't buy them at Wal Mart because they are not good enough quality) can help alleviate some of the "stress" symptoms. Also take vitamin B complex - almost any brand is fine, but try and find "cold-packed" (it means it was not cooked before capsulizing).

Also, please avoid red meat and of course sugars. Green vegatables, especially raw spinicspinachlife-saver and brings balance to the body. Do not drink caffeinated beverages, even diet sodas, because the caffeine in contra-iindicated and aggravates the body (excites it). Try to drink only de-caf coffee. If you must drink coffee in the morning (and I do) then stop at the second cup, and never after 10:00 A.M. Yoga is so very good for you that I recommend you get a DVD of Kundalini Yoga by Gurmuke (available at Borders in Rapid). This exercise routine is not hard on the body but begins to move the body into a less stressful system of energy management.

Do not get discouraged by how hard these simple exercises are, do what you can, and then one day you will be able to do the whole DVD (also available in VHS). Walk everyday. Park your car in the furthest spot from the door of the building you are going into (barring a blizzard).

Any mother of four children with a job is not going to be able to keep up with housework, any social life, work and manage her own life. There is going to be some chaos because of the stress load with time. You need help at home, and chores should be assigned to everyone, including your husband. Keep the dishes and laundry up, and create a chore list of responsibilities for your children (according to their ages) of work that must be done before they are allowed to do anything they want.

This won't kill them. Take all the clutter from your house in the areas you work and put it in one big bo x. As you place things in the box, have another one beside it for trash. When in doubt, toss it out. Only keep in front of you what you are working on (this really helps at work).

Because of the pace of your mind, it helps to separate things into three piles (paperwork you receive at work): the 'has to be done immediately' stac, the 'doesn't have to be done until later' stack, and the 'information only' stack. File the information as soon as you open your mail and you will feel better, but for time-pressed days, just stack it until you have a free hour to review and file. On Friday, totally clear your desk and place your two working piles in the top drawer. Whatever that needs to be done first should be on the very top of the file, and that is the only piece of paper you need on your desk. ADD people have to work with their "feeling like it" attitude.

We never really feel like it, we just know that we should be doing something, so we become mentally and emotionally aggravated when we are not efficient and it increase our inability to focus..

The solution is to decide that it would feel good to get it done and then do it. ADD people are really very good multi-taskers, as long as they remain sane. Frequently I have five or six projects at a time, but I only work on one at a time, and I change what I am doing when I begin to get either bored or frustrated.

Worry is a time taker of the ADD person. They churn worry out like a huge turbine. It creates disturbing energy. Trust yourself to be able to prioriprioritize yourself off the hook when not everything is done at once, and TRUST that you will recognize which is more important to focus on: the fire on the stove or the running water in the sink. You can do this!

Giver yourself total time off. Essentially, what isn't done in any one moment will wait for a few more moments or even days. Time to relax and to laugh will help you stay focused when you need to.

I am glad you recognize the pit-falls of PMS. Mark your calendar when you expect those days, beef up on vitamin B, and warn your family that this is "mommy's time." I just used to warn my family to stay away from me as much as possible for two days - because I couldn't promise them that I wouldn't eat them alive if they bugged me. It all worked out, everyone grew up, and my boys know a lot about women. Adderol, a drug commonly used for ADD is nothing I would ever consider for myself or my children.

I don't recommend that type of therapy for friends, family or foe.

Accept that ADD is not a brain stopping, life stopping problem. It is an over exicted sympathetic nervous system triggered by chemical imbalance in the body and brain. Exercise is your biggest friend. By the way, I use that facility that races my mind to be flexible and able to do many things and find many creative solutions to problems. When I "space out" on a conversation because my focus shifts, I allow myself to shift, then return my attention to the speaker. If I need too, I end the conversation at the next possible moment and excuse myself to return to what I need to do. It isn't discipline (except for diet), it is relaxation and watching myself cope that makes it for me, today, easy to live with ADD.

Nobody gets everything done, everyday, all the time. Most working mothers live with a certain casualness in their homes because they know that their own rest, relaxation and attention to family are more important than dust.

Good Luck to you, let me know how you do.

Native American Day at the South Dakota State Legislature

Two Bulls to submit legislation for $500,000 in funding for tribal college

BY TOM KATUS
Times Correspondent

PIERRE - For the sixth consecutive year, Native American Day was held on Jan. 17 at the beginning of this year's legislation session and issues such a tribal college funding and Indian Child Welfare Act enforcement highlighted the day.

The event was co-sponsored by these State's four Native American legislators, the Wakpa Sica Reconciliation Place, First Voices, South Dakota Indian Health Board, and the American Civil Liberties Union.

The keynote address was given by Tom Shortbull, president of Oglala Lakota College and South Dakota's first Native American state senator. He addressed two themes: The history of relations with non-Indians, and the history of tribes and the state of South Dakota. He said "Post Civil War, the US was weak. Red Cloud's War was the only war the US ever lost. The US Government with famous Civil War generals Sherman and Sheridan signed the 1868 Treaty of Peace, with Red Cloud and other Tribal leaders. All our rights go back to the treaty of 1868..."

"With the war on poverty in the 60s, the US government finally started encouraging Native Americans to go to college. In 1965, I went to the University of South Dakota with 20 other Native American students. Only two of us graduated. The elders began to ask why can't we educate our own? Oglala Lakota College and Sinte Gleska University were founded in 1971. Today there are 200 teachers on Pine Ridge. More than 100 are Native American and 86 percent of those are OLC graduates."

"I have served in and subsequently observed the legislature for 23 years. I don't know of any significant legislation that has been passed by the South Dakota Legislature for Native Americans. The state of Montana has allocated $500,000 for its tribal colleges. In South Dakota, we passed allocations of $50,000 annually for three consecutive years, but nothing was never dispersed."

He concluded, "Wake up South Dakota. Do something good for the health and education of tribal people."

Issues

Tribal college funding and Indian Child Welfare Act enforcement are two legislative issues that received top attention at Native American Day. Both issues subsequently received support by key Republican West River Senators during Rapid City's Legislative cracker barrel on Jan. 21.

While Shortbull was in Pierre, Representative Paul Valandra, (D-Mission) arranged meetings with the governor's office and some key legislators on the proposed tribal college legislation. As a result, Senator Theresa Two Bulls, OST Pine Ridge Democrat will submit legislation to provide for up to $500,000 for the tribal colleges this year. Republican Senators Dempster and Adelstein have agreed to be co-sponsors of this legislation.

Theresa Two Bulls

At Rapid City's legislative cracker barrel, South Dakota senator Stan Adelstein confirmed his support for the bill. Adelstein chairs the joint legislative State-Tribal Relations Committee. He stated, " If you're an enrolled member of your tribe, the tribal colleges receive some scholarship support from the respective tribe. If that same student attends one of the State's Universities, like all students, it costs the SD taxpayer approximately $3,000 annually. Montana has allocated $500,000 to support non-Federally recognized students, both native and non-Indian, enrolled at their respective tribal colleges. I am supporting legislation that will provide $1,000 per student to those tribal colleges that are accredited. We don't yet know exactly how many students will qualify," he concluded.

Valandra stated, "I'm beginning to see a little light at the end of the tunnel on the tribal college bill." Representative Jim Bradford, (D-Pine Ridge) was more skeptical. He stated, "We will support it, but I doubt it will pass."

Rev. Webster Two Hawk, former chairman RST and former state-tribal relations coordinator, attacked the enforcement of the Indian Child Welfare Act. He stated, "South Dakota's Department of Social Services kidnapped our granddaughter twice."

At Rapid City's legislative cracker barrel, Republican Senator Napoli, who is a member of the Senate appropriations committee blasted SDDSS. " When I heard brutal testimony from grandparents, uncles and aunts who had their grandchildren, nephews and nieces taken from them without notification, I was appalled. In one case, even after three years DSS did not permit the extended family to even know where they were placed, DSS is the closest (unit of government) to a socialist outfit as I have ever seen. Attorney General Larry Long is requesting $100,000 to study DSS's heavy handed tactics. I will support him. Government cannot raise children, people (grandparents and extended family) can", he concluded.

Representative Tom Van Norman, CRST Eagle Butte Democrat, indicated he may introduce additional legislation to force DSS to implement ICWA.

Mary Ann Bear Heels McGowan, Executive Director, First Voices stated, "We have made progress with racial profiling. We are now treated with courtesy and respect."

Mike Graham, executive director of United Native Americans and an Oklahoma Cherokee addressed the group. "We want to change the name of Custer State Park to Crazy Horse."

Governor Mike Browns addressed the group. "When we first did this (Native American Day) we didn't know if people would come, but they have. (These efforts) are long term. Our children should recognize differences in culture. It's something we should celebrate", he concluded.

Following the Governor's remarks, a ceremony conducted by Chief Leonard Crow Dog honored Governor Rounds, Tom Shortbull, and Rev. Webster Two Hawk. They were all given star quilts.

Additional remarks were made by all four native Legislators; Senator Two Bulls and Representatives Valandra, Van Norman, and Bradford. Other remarks were made by Mike Jandreau, Chairman Lower Brule Sioux Tribe, Clarence Skye, Executive Director United Sioux Tribe; Jeannie Faber, aide to senator John Thune, and FST enrolled member,; Rev Two Hawks, Mrs. McGowan, Stacey LeCompte, Wakpa Sica, and Jennifer Ring, ACLU.

Indian National Finals Rodeo is organized year round

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

BROWNING, MT - With the Great Plains Indian Rodeo Shoot-out coming to the Black Hills Stock Show and Rodeo on Jan. 28, an examination of the GPIRA's place in the Indian National Finals Rodeo national organization reveals the INFR's history and stability which surpasses thirty years. Information about INFR can be accessed at www.infr.org.

The GPIRA is no stranger to the Black Hills as it is based in Rapid City and it is also a featured rodeo at the Crazy Horse Stampede which will be held this year June 16-18 on the grounds of the Custer Memorial. The Stampede is also sanctioned by the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association.

The Indian National Finals Rodeo is headquartered in Browning, MT, in the heart of the Blackfoot Nation. It appears that most anyone with certain proven rodeo skills around livestock is able to join the organization by filling out a membership form along with a fee of $200 for a Tour Card. One can pay a fee of $100 for a Region Card and in both cases the fee is distributed in part to the Region and the INFR.

For members there is an entry fee of $100 to a maximum of $250, and a stock charge per event of $10 per event, with a one time administration fee of $10. At each event, the INFR provides a rodeo secretary who will ensure consistent payouts and application of rules.

For those unfamiliar with rodeo terminology, the point system, money splits, drawbacks, and added money scale are all jargon that is potentially confusing for the novice. That is where a call to the INFR office would be helpful. In addition, one can call one of the ten regional offices located primarily in the western half of the United States.

The ten regions are governed by a representative board of INFR Commissioners, while the regions are: Eastern Indian Rodeo Association (EIRA) located in Okeechobee, FL, Great Plains Indian Rodeo Association (GPIRA) in Rapid City, Indian Rodeo Cowboys Association (IRCA) located in Standoff, Alberta, Canada, Northern Alberta Native Cowboys Association (NANCA) in Browning, Mont., Northern Plains Indian Rodeo Association (NPIRA) in Garry Owen, Mont., Rocky Mountain Indian Rodeo Association (RMIRA) in Blackfoot, Idaho, the South West Indian Rodeo Association, (SWIRA) in San Carlos, AZ, United Indian Rodeo Association (UNIRA) located in Valier, MT, and the Western States Indian Rodeo Association (WSIRA) located in Casa Grande, Ariz.

The qualifiers for the Indian National Final Rodeo this year include the top 10 finishers from Tour standings, the year end champion from each Region, and Finals winners from each Region.

Each year a Miss Indian Rodeo is selected during the rodeo pageant. The current 2006 Miss Indian Rodeo is Jaci Lynn Etzkorn, a Cheyenne River Sioux from Dupree who is a student attending the University of Minnesota at Moorehead.

The Tour rodeos for 2006 which have been approved by INFR include, February: EIRA Tour Rodeo in Big Cypress, Fla., Feb. 4 and 5, Second EIRA Tour Rodeo in Brighton, Fla., February 15-17. June: NANCA Tour Rodeo in Saddle Lake, Alberta, Canada, June 23-25. July: NNRCA Tour Rodeo, Kayenta, AZ, July 1-4, WSIRA Tour Rodeo, Ely, Nev/, July 21-23. September: GPIRA Tour Rodeo in Eagle Butte, Sept. 2-4.

AIDS numbers increase

PIERRE - The number of new AIDS cases in South Dakota has increased from 19 new cases the year before to 33 new cases in 2005.

Since 1985 when the first case was identified in the state 495 people have been infected with AIDS and 145 died so far. The state has 288 HIV-AIDS cases with 72 percent male and 28 percent female. South Dakota has the second lowest AIDS rate in the nation, while North Dakota is the lowest. The state's rate is 17.2 per 100,000 residents which is about one tenth the national rate of 169 per 100,000 according to the Center for Disease Control

State prepares for bird flu

RAPID CITY - Rapid City and the state of South Dakota are preparing for a deadly strain of the avian flu called H5N1. Health officials have warned that if it is found that H5N1 can be passed from person, the world could be in for a global outbreak or what is called a pandemic.

Last fall, the federal government announced a $7.1 million emergency spending program that will help to prepare for such a pandemic and the development of a new vaccine.

The Center for Disease Control is recommending ways for people to prepare for a pandemic. Basically, people are encouraged to wash their hands, educate themselves about pandemics and to have an adequate supply of medications and other health supplies.

Council selects casino project manager, approves new probate code, reaffirms tribal prosecutors

BY TOM CRASH
Time's Correspondent

PORCUPINE - As the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council wrapped up its regular session in Porcupine, gaming and the continued work on the new Prairie Wind Casino occupied the attention of the council representatives. Lenart Brown Eyes, an independent contractor from Martin, was selected as the new project manager of the Prairie Wind Casino construction project.

"In order for construction to continue on the casino project, we need to hire a project manager," said Paul Little, council representative from Oglala, "we agreed to have Rick Shangreaux do it on a temporary basis and now we need to move ahead and select someone who is qualified and is able to finish the project."

The council approved, by a vote of 11-1 the project manager job description and the RFP. With three candidates interested in the position, the council conducted a secret ballot for the project manager position and Jess Claussen received six votes, Lenart Brown Eyes received four and Joe Locust finished with two. Following questions about hourly rates, mileage money and bonding, there was a motion to hire Jess Claussen as the temporary project manager and have the economic and busi-

State Equal Justice Commission issues final report on unfairness

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

PIERRE - The Supreme Court of South Dakota created the Equal Justice Commission on January 2004 and the commission has recently released its final report on unfairness in the South Dakota Judicial System based upon race and ethnicity.

The eleven member commission was co-chaired by Justice John K. Konenkamp and retired Oglala Sioux Tribal Court Chief Judge Patrick A. Lee.

The Commission was charged with performing the following tasks: identify areas where there is a perception of unfairness based upon race, ethnicity and minority status and to invite public input while looking at available data; formulate and propose guidelines, standards and procedures to ensure equal justice in South Dakota's judicial system and exploring ways to promote better understanding as ethnic and racial minorities enter the judicial system; recommend appropriate judicial and legal education course material and programs on equality; advise the South Dakota Supreme Court on possible legislation to further equal justice in the state judicial system; recommend a mechanism for processing complaints about biased behavior of judges, lawyers and court personnel; encourage greater racial and gender diversity in the appointment of justices, circuit judges and magistrates; recommend teaching, curricula and continuing education to the South Dakota State Bar and the USD Law School to eliminate biased conduct on the part of attorneys and submit a written report with eighteen months.

Interviews and public hearings were held at 15 sites across the state, including locations in Pierre, Rapid City, Sioux Falls and Vermillion. The commission also received letters and written testimonials. It also considered statistical data submitted by three faculty from the University of South Dakota.

In the interest of time, only the novel and significant 'recommendations' to the South Dakota Supreme Court are summarized as they are based upon the 'findings' and listing them twice would be redundant.

The recommendations on 'Unfairness' ask judges and Sueann Iron Shell scheduled for kidney transplant

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Sueann Iron Shell, 32, is scheduled to receive a donor kidney from her brother, Calvin Iron Shell, Jr. on Feb. 1 in Omaha, Neb. at the University Of Nebraska Medical Center. Her father Calvin Iron Shell, Sr. has taken a proactive role in fundraising for the related expenses the family will need to stay for two weeks in Omaha.

Iron Shell, Sr. just like all fathers, is concerned about his daughter's health and is spreading the word about the devastating disease, diabetes that has necessitated Sue Ann having to undergo a kidney transplant. He said, Sueann Iron Shell to undergo kidney transplant this week.

"When Sueann was 12, she experienced symptoms of fatigue and confusion. She was an excellent student and that wasn't a good sign. Her mother got concerned and took her in to be checked. Psychologically, it hurt her and she interpreted as she had done something wrong. It was traumatic."

Sueann is a model and has used her skills and background to fight the disease. She organized a road run in North Sioux City. Her efforts have been joined by many others who recognize the need to find a cure and also help others who need financial support during such extended hospital stays.

Iron Shell Sr. said that Calvin, Jr. was the closest matched of Sueann's siblings. He said, "The donor is Calvin Jr. His birthday is today, Jan.28. He matched the closest. Everything is set as this thing can hit her anytime. Last night we had a sweat, and there be another one before we go to Omaha."

The generational nature of diabetes in the Iron Shell family can be traced back to others, as Iron Shell, Sr. noted that his mother, father, and two sisters were afflicted. He also says that Sue Ann is the only of his children that has diabetes, thus far. He is frustrated that with billions of dollars being conducted on diabetes research there has been no cure discovered.

He said, "A good part of healing is to ness development committee negotiate the contract. The motion failed five for, six against and one not voting. The council then voted 6-5 with one not voting to hire Brown Eyes as the temporary project manager.

Representatives from a number of tribes met in Pierre on Jan. 11 to continue the work on a united tribal effort for a new gaming compact between the tribes and the governor of South Dakota. Representatives from Standing Rock, Yankton, Cheyenne River, Sisseton and Rosebud were joined by Ruth Brown, council representative from Eagle Nest District, Austin Watkins, council representative from Medicine Root District, Bernard White Face, council representative from Porcupine District and Lyle Jack, council representative from Pine Ridge and chairman of the economic and business development committee.

"We are still working on a request to the governor for multiple sites, a longer length for the next compacts and for a market driven number of gaming devices for each tribe involved in gaming," said Ruth Brown, chairman of the OST land committee" She went on to say, "The meeting went well and we plan to come together again on Feb. 21 to finalize the presentation to be made to Governor Rounds in April."

Brown has been working diligently on a second site for a tribal casino between Wanblee and Kadoka and is waiting for a time when the tribe is permitted more that 250 gaming devices.

"Our plan for the eastern reservation casino is now dependent on the tribe being approved for additional devices," said Brown, "it is just not feasible to build it and operate it with Class Two gaming devices."

Sisseton Wahpeton and Flandreau both chipped in $10,000 to help fund the research and data gathering needed to provide the necessary back up documents on each tribe and their market area to make the case for the tribes and their interest in continued growth and expansion." added Brown.

The council also voted 14-0 to approve a new probate code, to have a report from the Oglala Sioux Parks and Recreation Authority at the next meeting and to have a detailed expenditure report on both the $18 million debt consolidation loan and the $20 million casino construction project loan. They also voted 12-0 against authorizing the request for Wakpa Sica to place land into trust.

Frustrated in not being able to deal with emergency issues that seem to find their way to the council on a regular basis, the council voted 8-4 to once again allow a two thirds vote to add items to the council's agenda. The council then voted 12-0 to amend 05-20 to provide for the standing committees to advertise, select and seat their respective committee coordinators for a two year term.

The judiciary committee brought a resolution to rescind council action that reaffirmed the hiring of the two tribal prosecutors, Theresa Two Bulls and Anne Apple. Instead the council once again re-affirmed their support for Two Bulls and Apple as tribal prosecutors by a vote of 12-0.

The special session of the council to hear the complaint against Walt Big Crow took place in Porcupine on Tuesday, a special session on economic and business development committee activities is scheduled for Wednesday in Pine Ridge and a two day session finish the regular session items is scheduled for Feb. 9 and 10 in Pine Ridge.

court personnel to be vigilante in allowing stereotypical behavior towards minorities, as well as asking the Unified Judicial System to educate judges and court personnel that bias and sensitivity toward minorities exists. All personnel in the UJS would benefit from cultural competency training as well as recommending the recruitment of minority employees throughout the state. Tribal court personnel should be used in diversity training, and the Supreme Court should establish a standing education committee to educate the public. The South Dakota Supreme Court should appoint qualified minorities to serve on the South Dakota Board of Pardons. The Supreme Court should create a process to address complaints about issues of race involving UJS personnel. Finally, UJS should recommend to the South Dakota Board of Regents that a minimum of two to three hours of Native American culture and history be a mandatory requirement from a 4-year public university.

The recommendations on 'Language Interpretation' ask the Supreme Court to create comprehensive guidelines for the adequate interpretation and legal translation services for all people in need of interpreters.

The Supreme Court needs to draft judicial forms and documents in easily translatable English and all legal translations are to be made by approved legal translators. The third recommendation asks the Supreme Court to orient and sensitize all court personnel as to the complexities of communicating with people of diverse linguistic and cultural backgrounds.

The recommendations on 'Juvenile Justice' recommend that the Supreme Court require a data base that is race specific on all people brought into the judicial system. The UJS should make every effort to recruit, training and promote minority personnel in the judicial system. The legislature should develop and fund culturally specific programs for minority youth for both in-home and out-of-home placements, while allowing locally available dispositional options for minority juveniles as alternatives to removal from the home. Finally, the State of South Dakota needs to work out reciprocal juvenile probation agreements with the tribes.

The recommendations on 'Juries' ask the UJS and the State Bar of South Dakota to use public education programs to increase awareness about the purpose and function of grand and petit juries and increasing minority representation on such juries.

The recommendations on 'Arrests and Stops' encourages the State of South Dakota to initiate a pilot program to document the racial makeup of all persons strapped by law enforcement officers on South Dakota highways. The information collected should include the reasons for the stop and the disposition (release, warning, citation, and arrest.)

The recommendations on 'Pretrial Procedures' ask that an objective scale be used by prosecutors, judges, and evaluators as a model to developing neutral pretrial release tools. Also, the Attorney General of South Dakota is asked to conduct a pilot project on the collection of data from prosecutors in selected counties on charging and plea negotiating decisions and the racial makeup of those affected.

The recommendations on 'criminal justice dispositions' asks the South Dakota Office of Tribal Government Relations to meet with tribal leaders to negotiate a plan on bilateral extradition and probation supervision agreements. Judges and court service officers should receive training on racially and culturally neutral sentencing determinations.

Also, the UJS should maintain database of the racial makeup of all persons sentenced on felonies and class one misdemeanors. The Department of Corrections is asked to encourage all staff to receive training in Native American religious practices.

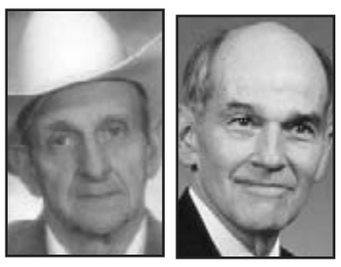
Iron Shell scheduled for transplant take a gamble and in this country we do not like to gamble. I have traveled to Mexico for spiritual gatherings. They are more advanced in their treatment and they want me to take her there."

Iron Shell, Sr. was speaking of the tight controls that the federal government exercises over drug companies and innovations in medical advancement. Some countries are not burdened by such governmental oversight and thus, are able to be a bit more creative in their solutions to such health issues. An example of that might be stem cell research which is being conducted in places like China and other nations which see potential for its application.

Sueann not only enjoys the support of her immediate Sicangu family, but her mate Charlie Silvas who is a California Indian, is a great supporter also, according to Iron Shell, Sr. He said, "He is a very big supporter. He works in construction. When she goes into a coma, it pulls the family down. It is trying on all of us. We want this transplant to happen."



Iron Shell, Sr. who worked at St. Francis Indian School as a highly successful basketball coach in the past, also worked for the tribe in a number of capacities. He holds a bachelor of science degree in teaching from the University of Nebraska at Lincoln. He served in the U.S. Army and was an airborne trooper from 1951-54. He also ran the first SGU Summer Institute in 1972. He administered the tribe's CETA program and did a lot of work with the former RST President Charlie Colombe's administration.

He said that there needs to be more economic development and jobs for the people. In the likelihood that does not happen, Iron Shell, Sr. wants to take the initiative with his own extended family and see if they can begin some projects to become self-sufficient for themselves. He said, "I have the largest tiospaye. I am the chief now. We are going to organize and do something for our own relations."

The Iron Shell family is asking for the generous support from the Sicangu people and the public at large in order to stay for a two week duration in Omaha. The donations will cover the cost of transportation, food and lodging and post surgery expenses. To give a donation to cover related expenses for Sueann's kidney transplant, please contact Rosalie Iron Shell or Calvin Iron Shell, Sr. at 605-747-5614. Their address is PO Box 512, Rosebud, S.D. 57570.

Reps. Bradford and Van Etten clash over Pine Ridge retirement home

BY TOM KATUS
Time's Correspondent

Jim Bradford, Don Van Etten

PIERRE - Last week, Representative Jim Bradford, D-Pine Ridge, proposed legislation to receive state authorization to build a second reservation retirement home - this time on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Representative Don Van Etten, Rep-Rapid City, strongly opposed Bradford's proposal. He said, "In 2003, we passed a bill to authorize a nursing home on a reservation. It was approved for the Cheyenne River Reservation as a pilot. This was done despite a moratorium on nursing homes in the rest of the state because we have 7,101 licensed beds in the system, more than 900 of which are not in use. We authorized this pilot home, even though care for Native Americans on the reservations is the responsibility of the federal government. Even with this approval, construction has been slow. We are told that only the footings are complete, and it will still be 12-15 months before that facility is open. It was inappropriate for Representative Bradford to bring a proposal for a second facility forward."

At the Legislative Cracker Barrel in Rapid City on Jan. 28, Jay Davis, a lawyer from Rapid City, challenged Van Etten. He said, "You seem to be very opposed to Bradford's proposal for a Pine Ridge facility." Van Etten replied, "Yes, there was a gentleman's agreement with Governor Rounds that we would authorize only this pilot. We would see what it cost and how it works." Senator Stan Adelstein, Rep-Rapid City, supported Bradford. He said, "The problem on Pine Ridge is that are such distances for so many poor people to travel. Because of the long moratorium impose, it's reasonable for Bradford to make this request." Bradford agreed with Adelstein's analysis. He commented, "My mother-in-law is in a nursing home in Martin, and she has more than 100 direct descendants living more than 100 miles round trip to visit her. Many of them are poor and cannot afford to drive these long distances."

Van Etten retorted, "The distance to a nursing home in South Dakota is no worse than anywhere else. A 50 bed facility will cost us $1.7 million to operate annually. This really is not the state's responsibility. We're already making an exception in Eagle Butte."

Bradford responded, "I'm tired of his whining about the cost to the state. If they would only turn Medicaid over to the tribes, we could take care of it on our own. By law, we have to go through the state to get authorization to build a home on the reservation. The tribes pay for all the construction costs. It's the annual operating costs he's whining about. Under the federal formula, the feds pay 70 percent of Medicaid costs; the state 30 percent. In the committee, Van Etten was very rude. He's running around in a perfect world. He thinks Indian people are living off of him. Quite the reverse is true. Many of us provide him their livelihoods."

Bradford continued, "Besides, he was not even at the so-called gentleman's agreement to which he refers. That was between Governor Rounds, Paul Valandra, D-Mission, Tom Van Norman, Dem-Eagle Butte, and me three years ago." Dick Hagen, Dem-Pine Ridge, who had served both as a representative and senator, had annually sought support for a home on one of the reservations. "When we met with the Governor, he apologized to me and indicated the first home would be built on Cheyenne River but that the next one would be on Pine Ridge. There was never a time limit as to when the second home could be proposed. The only thing I did differently this year than previous years was to specify that the second home should be on Pine Ridge," concluded Bradford. Representative Valandra supported Bradford's interpretation of the gentleman's agreement. He stated that the state authorizing the nursing home on CRST was one of the most significant pieces of legislation for Native Americans passed in his 16 years in the Senate and House.

Bill to improve state's filming industry

PIERRE - The House of Representatives passed HB 1206 on Jan.30 entitled "An Act to provide contractor's excise, refund, and use tax refunds for the filming of certain motion pictures, documentaries, or television films." The refund only pertains to project costs incurred and paid after July 1, 2006, and within 36 months of the approval of the application. No refund will be made unless the amount incurred in South Dakota exceeds the sum of $250 thousand.

$2.7 million grant to help nursing students

ABERDEEN - A $2.7 million federal grant paid for nursing students to earn their degrees through Presentation College in hopes that they would work near their homes. The Department of Labor grant is called the Skills Enhancement and Education through Distance learning and graduated several nurses who are working in South Dakota and North Dakota. Seven nurses now work in the Mobridge and Eagle Butte area. The SEED program ended in May 2003 when most of the 95 nursing student graduated.

In an effort to better meet the needs of our clients the Optometry Program will provide services to Diabetic Patients on Tuesday mornings on a walk-in basis that have been referred from the Diabetic Clinic.

"No Show" Policy: If a client fails to keep two scheduled appointments then their name will be placed at the end of the waiting list. If you know that you will not be able to keep a scheduled appointment, we ask that you call the Optometry Department to cancel the appointment as early as possible so that another patient may be given the appointment.

EMERGENCY SERVICES

The Rosebud Comprehensive Health Care Facility provides 24 hour Emergency Services. When you present to the Emergency Department you will be greeted by a Medical Support Assistant that will ask for your name, date of birth and/or chart number in order to obtain your medical record.

You will be TRIAGED by a Registered Nurse within 15 minutes from the time of your arrival. The Registered Nurse will ask you for your Chief Complaint (What brings you to the ER?) and will obtain vital signs (blood pressure, pulse, temperature, respirations, height, weight and pain scale).

NO patient will be turned away from the Emergency Department. Triage is a process that assists the medical provider in establishing the order in which the patients will receive a Medical Screening Exam and care/treatment. Triage is NOT a Medical Screening Exam.

Triage levels are as follows:

Level I: Non-Urgent
Level II: Urgent
Level III: Emergency

Just because you signed up first does not necessarily mean that you will be seen first. Patients that present to the Emergency Department will be seen in the order of their Medical Priority, which is determined during the Triage Process.

A Medical Screening Exam (MSE) is a process. It is the continuation of an initial assessment during an Emergency Room visit. It is NOT for the purpose of excluding patients from care or for financial reimbursement. It is a Legal Responsibility of the facility. The Medical Provider will perform a Medical Screening Exam which will consist of obtaining information pertaining to vital signs, current medications, medical history, physical exam, and providing medical stabilization when deemed necessary.

CONTRACT HEALTH SERVICES

Important Facts You Should Know About Contract Health

IHS-CHS Coverage is not automatic. Should you have an emergency situation requiring you to obtain care at a non-IHS facility, you must notify the CHS office at 605-747-3215 OR 605-747-3216 within 72 hours. If you fail to notify the CHS office you will be responsible for any bills you incur.

IHS-CHS Coverage is for Emergent, Life-Threatening situations. Sore Throats, earaches, and medication refills, etc., are not considered emergent or life threatening. IHS-CHS will not cover a visit if an IHS Facility would have been closer. CHS does not cover medicatons.

If you visit a non-IHS facility you MUST sign a release of information to provide this information to the CHS office. The CHS committee cannot make a decision without sufficient medical information. In most cases a referral is limited to one medical treatment and/or appointment.

CHS Eligibility Criteria: You MUST be an enrolled member of a federally recognized tribe. You MUST reside within the Contract Health Service Delivery Area (CHSDA) which covers the counties surrounding the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Reservation. If you are a non-member of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe you MUST reside within the reservation boundaries.

Eligible Veterans: A patient will apply and utilize alternate resources if the individual is eligible. This is pursuant to IHS Regulation, 42 CFR, Part C. Purpose: To ensure patients receive the resources they are qualified for/or entitled to. To inquire about eligibility or to apply for benefits, contact the local Veterans Health Administration Center in Hot Springs at 1-800-764-5370 or the Rosebud Veterans Center at 605-747-2593.

IHS-CHS Approval: Please do not request preauthorization from the Indian Health Service. The CHS Committee must review all referrals and call-in requests. The CHS Committee approves or disapproves the referrals based on medical facts presented and the CHS criteria being met. The committee is the only authority to approve or disapprove.

IHS-CHS Payor of Last Resort: The Patient MUST apply for any alternate resources for which they may be eligible. A denial from the alternate resource is required for reconsideration by the CHS Committee. You may contact the Patient Benefits Coordinator to assist in the application process for alternate resources. Please call (605)747-3213 for further information. CHS Guidelines require all patients under the age of 18 and all pregnant patients apply for Medicaid.

Non-Compliance With the Approval Process May Serve as the Basis for Denial of Payment by Contract Health Services:

Payment Process: When a patient has Medicare, Medicaid, CHAMPUS, Private Insurance, Workmen's Compensation or is covered by another resource, that resource is considered the primary carrier. All Explanations of Benefits (EOBs) from the primary carrier(s) must be brought or mailed to the CHS office without delay when received by the patient. Many times the Non-IHS provider will turn the patient's bill over to a collection agency because the provider is unable to obtain an EOB from the patient. It is Very Important that you provide this to the provider of the CHS office in order to complete the payment process.

For further information regarding Contract Health Services please feel free to contact:
Sharyn Richards,
Contract Health Service Manager at:
605-747-3239.

Lady Mustangs come from behind to win second straight Dakota Oyate Challenge title

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

HURON - For the third time this year, the Pine Ridge Lady Thorpes and the Little Wound Lady Mustangs laced it up and did battle on the basketball court; Saturday, it was in Huron for the championship of the Dakota Oyate Challenge and after trailing for most of the game, the Lady Mustangs tied the game at 47 and again at 50, took the lead and never gave it up for a hard fought 64-62 win for their second straight DOC championship.

Robin Webber helped Pine Ridge to six point leads in the first quarter of 12-6 and 18-12 with 10 points on four field goals and a free throw while Lacy Weston and Christian Janis team up for another six point lead 27-21and a 35-32 halftime lead; Weston had eight on four field goals, Janis hit four of six from the line with a field goal for six points. Weston added six more in the third as Pine Ridge led it 50-47 at the end of the third.

Sadie In The Woods, a 5'11" senior for Little Wound who has played every position for the Mustangs, scored in each quarter, hit ten of her team high 19 in the second half and provided the leadership for the defending champs to pull out another one. Even though all of the Lady Thorpes and everyone in the stands knew the lanky and lithe ballplayer from No Flesh community was going to get the ball, Sadie proved unstoppable. In addition to the 19 points, In the Woods added 11 rebounds, six assists, a blocked shot and four steals.

HURON - After derailing the undefeated 13-0 Tiospa Zina Wambdi 64-55 in the semis, Little Wound went up quickly in the championship game with Omaha Nation and led at the half 36-31 but the Chiefs came out storming in the third quarter to go from five down to seven up and kept the pressure on for a 68-59 win.

Ty Lunderman, in his best game as a Mustang, took the lead in the first quarter with three field goals for seven points as Little Wound shot well from the field as both Willie Zephier and Rich Big Boy helped with back to back shots and Devon LeBeau hit the first of his four three pointers. The game was tied five times in the first quarter and ended up 20-20 at the end of one.

Lunderman added two of his four threes in the second and Big Boy added a couple more field goals and LeBeau hits a field goal and knocks down two free throws to give Little Wound a 36-31 lead at the half.

Jerrel Grant, a 6'2" senior, grabbed nine of his game high 13 rebounds in the second half for the Chiefs and helped lead the Omaha Nation resurgence while Taurean Miller knocked down a couple of threes and a deuce to set the tone for the Nebraska team and got some strong help from Sam Dick, a 5'11" junior who scored 11 of his 17 points in the second half.

Lunderman continued his torrid pace with another three and a two in the third but didn't get much, Little Wound went ice cold from the field in the third quarter and really didn't thaw out for the rest of the game. LeBeau continued to hustle on defense grabbing six steals and pulling down a team high seven rebounds and Brice Hornbeck finished with seven rebounds and seven steals but Lunderman fouled out halfway through the fourth and Zephier was out with 2:30 to go and Little Wound ran out of time as they tried to climb back into the game.

Dick finished with 17 points and eight rebounds, Miller added 16 points and nine rebounds while Grant had 10 points and 13 rebounds, the Chiefs outrebounded Little Wound 41-26.

Lunderman, in his best outing finished with 18, LeBeau had 16 and Rich Big Boy needed it and got a balanced offense from In The Woods, Tyanne Pourier, Nichelle Red Owl and Shay Janis off the bench."

Janis came off the bench and hit one three in each quarter for 12 points, Red Owl finished with 11 and Pourier helped with 10. West led all scorers with 21 while Webber hit for 14 points and grabbed seven rebounds for Pine Ridge.

"We have improved in each game against Little Wound," said Dennis Dolezal, first year head coach for Pine Ridge, "we will play them a fourth time in the first round of the districts and that is the game that will really count, that is the one we have to be ready for."

Little Wound won the first meeting between the two teams during the Lakota Nation in December 60-49 and won 73-63 in overtime in Kyle last week and if the two teams continue to win, the Lady Mustangs will host Pine Ridge on Feb. 21 in the first round of District 14A play.

The Lady Mustangs opened the tourney with a 111-23 win over Flandreau Indian JV as Pourier led the way with 30 points, In the Woods chipped in 24, Red Owl added 19, Whitney Pourier 13 and Janis hit for 12. Little Wound downed Mandaree in the quarterfinals 56-35 and got by the stubborn Tiospaye Topa Lady Thunderhawks 58-49 in the semis as Alicia Red Bear hit for 22 points while grabbing 11 rebounds; In the Woods and Red Owl each hit for 16 and Pourier chipped in 12.

The Lady Thorpes opened this year's DOC with a 99-23 win over Walt Hill as Lacey Weston led five girls in double figures with 19, Christian Janis helped with 18, Webber and Keisha Brewer added 14 each as Sophia Janis tossed in 10. Weston led the way again 16 points in the second game, a 68-44 win over Todd County JV. Brewer helped with 13 and Deanna Big Crow added 10. Pine Ridge earned a trip to the championship game with an 82-39 win over Omaha Nation. Again Pine ridge had five players in double figures with Webber leading the w2ay with 23 points, Christian Janis helped with 14, Lacey Weston added13 and Brewer and Sophia Janis chipped in 10 each.

Chanelle Saunsoci hit six threes in leading Omaha Nation to a 52-41 third place win over Tiospaye Topa. Shavonne Stepp scored 22 in the Crow Creek 51-44 win over Todd County JV for 5th. Valree Burbank hit for 19 points to lead Mandaree 62-46 over Marty for 7th and Maggie Miller with 15 and Lynelle Fremont with 11 led the Flandreau Lady Indians to their third straight tourney win for the consolation championship a 67-45 win over Takini.

All tourney for the girl's tourney included: Kathleen Webster/Omaha Nation, Alicia Red Bear/Tiospaye Topa, Britta Cook/Marty, Autumn Johnson/Takini, Mary White Eyes/Walt Hill, Nichelle Red Owl and Tyann Pourier/Little Wound, Christian Clarquist/Lac Courte Oreille, Lynelle Fremont/Flandreau Indian, Wilma Steel/Wakpala, Rayannon Summers/Heart of the Earth, Krista Bear Stops/Takini, Ashley Ross/Crow Creek, Lana Rencountre/Flandreau JV, Shantelle Fettig/Mandaree and Lacey Weston and Sophia Janis/Pine Ridge.

Alicia Red Bear scored 74 for the top scorer of the tournament, Chanell Saunsoci hit 13 threes, Defense went to Kathleen Webster, Hustle to Robin Webber and the MVP to Sadie In the Woods. Jo Miner of Tiospaye Topa won the free throw contest while Shavonne Stepp won the three point contest.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Readers: In last week's column, I said that ADD is represented by an overly excitable sympathetic nervous system. That was incorrect, that it should be the para-sympathetic and empathetic nervous system. I apologize for the error.

Dear Anna:

This may sound stupid, but it doesn't feel stupid. I am a woman that works as a professional and I make pretty good money.

I have a big family and they have a lot of financial trouble so I am always helping them, but that has become a problem for me. Now, everyone expects me to give them money, and I still feel obligated, but I don't have enough money to pay all of my bills and take care of my kids because I keep "giving" money away.

I mean well, but I want to tell everybody "NO" so that I don't get into more trouble, but I know that they won't understand. What can I do, what do you see?

Working and broke

Dear Broke:

I understand. With so many people in need it produces a recognition in us to help - and so we do, albeit sometimes, foolishly. I know you think your family members won't believe you if you tell them you are in a financial jam - but tell them anyway.

Starting this payday, make it a habit to:

First: pay your bills.

Second: buy the groceries and things you need, Third: Put enough money aside to survive on until next payday, Fourth: put 10 percent of your check into savings for later. Then, if there is anything left, you can give it to those who you decide need it most.

To simplify your life, and to remove yourself from guilt, please try and schedule in an amount (just like it was a bill), every month that you can "give" away.

Right now, I see you helping beyond what you can and should afford. You don't want to lose your car because you paid your brother-in-law's bail, and you know they can't pay you back, so now you have to pick up the pieces. Sometime, generous people, give too much - so much, in fact, that they are enablers. Help yourself by not buying alcoholics alcohol, or drug addicts drugs.

That is what is happening to a lot of the money you hand out. If you are worried about it, then pay a bill directly for somebody, or buy them groceries.

I do see you bringing two of your nieces and one nephew into your home - that will stop the support of their parents, and allow the children to have a better chance at a good life.

The question that I always ask is "How much can I give?" The answer Spirit gives me is: "Give freely of your heart, wisely with your time, and comfortably with your money."

Dear Anna:

My sister was 13-years old when she gave birth to my niece. I was 22-years old when my sister gave birth and married and had a good life so I took my niece as my own daughter and nobody has ever told my niece that I am her auntie and not her mom.

My niece is now 14-years old. Now my sister is doing very well in the world, has a good career and is married to a nice man.

They don't live in South Dakota, so my "daughter" very seldomly gets to see her "auntie." It seems as though my sister's new life entirely excludes her daughter. I want some help financially now from my sister, as my own circumstances have changed - but she feels that this would put "undue" stress on her relationship. What can I do? What do you see?

Frustrated, depressed and discouraged

Dear Frustrated:

Well, whew! Lots of troubles here - right? Your "daughter" loves you very much, but she wonders sometimes, if your sister might be her mom.

Mostly this has to do with old pictures she has seen. It is time to tell her. She has the right to know, and if you don't tell her, somebody else will.

She will take it well, it will point out to her how very much you love her, because she has never felt "left out or different" than everybody else. Your sister is not going to budge. I don't think her new husband knows that her "niece" is actually her daughter.

Therefore, it is not likely that you can convince her to economically help you, and blackmailing her is NOT a good idea. Instead, ask her to pay for a formal and legal adoption.

Very soon, you will have a new administrative position, your money will be back to what it was, the new man in your life will help you build the house you want - so things will straighten out, and you will be happy that you did not take money from your sister or her husband.

Blessings, Anna

Dear Anna:

I have to tell my family that I am HIV positive. I am in my early twenties, and am not sure how it happened, but I just got the results last Friday. What do you see for me? What can I do? Can I live with this terrible disease?

Am I going to die soon? Will I ever have any children? Will anybody ever love me? I am so upset that I wish I were dead, what do you see?

HIV+

Dear positive:

Right now, even though you are HIV positive, you are not actively involved with AIDS. The secret for you is to keep your immune system enhanced with immune system enhancers such as vitamins, garlic, anti-oxidants, vitamin C and B, euchinesia, etc.

Do not drink alcohol or indulge in recreational drugs.

Please seek the help of a medicine man as they can do more positive healing than any medical doctor or system.

Your parents will cry, but they will react with love and compassion.

To make your love life easier, you might use a philosophy that I use: stay faithful to the man of your future, the one you don't know yet, the one who is your mate, the one who will love you. This cuts out any mis-guided passionate encounters and keeps you and others safe.

When you meet the right man, you can share your truth and he will understand.

I am sorry, but I think because of the risk to future children, you decide not to give birth. This can change however, when your illness "disappears" which as far as I can see can only happen when you make an active decision to follow the Red Road.

It is your best path to health.

Please take it, it may be your only real chance to recreate your life dream.

My prayers are with you.

"When You Are Gone"

When you are gone," she softly spoke,
"What would you like for me
To do to show my love for you?
What would you like?" said she.
"I'd like," I said, "no tears, my dear;
I'd like instead a few
Sweet moments when you think of me
And of my love for you.
"I'd like you to recall our joy
And, if you wish, our tears,
And be reminded of our dreams,
Our hopes, our doubts, our fears
"Remember, if you will, my faults,
Recall mistakes I made,
But never, dear, forget my love . . .
Too seldom I displayed.
For when I'm gone I'll think of you
Wherever I may be,
And thank the everlasting gods
That you belonged to me.

State legislative oversight of Indian gaming discussed

Bradford urges support of opposition

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

PIERRE - The South Dakota Senate Affairs Committee discussed SB 167 sponsored by Senator Dave Knudson (R-Sioux Falls.) SB 167 is described as "An Act to revise the conditions under which the state may enter into gaming compacts with Indian tribes." The measure which is controversial to eight of the nine South Dakota tribes which have gaming compacts with the state, seeks to add legislative oversight if a compact changes the location of a tribal casino or increases the number of gaming devices.

The Federal Indian Gaming Regulatory Act which governs tribal casinos allows the same type of gaming elsewhere in a state. The Act allows the Governor to negotiate such compacts with Indian tribes and by all accounts the process is going smoothly. The Act was enacted in 1988 as Public Law 100-497 and establishes the jurisdictional framework governing Indian gaming and established three classes of games.

Council votes 10-6 to dismiss complaint on Walt Big Crow

BY TOM CRASH
Time's Correspondent

PORCUPINE - After a day of testimony, a bit of acrimony, an ejection, an extended executive session and some heated discussions, the tribal council voted 10-6 to dismiss the complaint filed against Walt Big Crow, council representative from Wakpamni District, by Jeff Whalen, head of the tribe's Transportation Department.

"Oh my god," said Will Peters, council representative from Pine Ridge Village after the vote was announced, "we just heard all of this testimony on tribal corruption and we have chosen not to do anything about it; I just don't understand what we are doing, if we do not stand up against corruption in the tribe then we are saying that we are in favor of it."

New book has chapter on 'The Battle of Whiteclay'

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

ARLINGTON, Va. - Author Stew Magnuson is teasing the public with an excerpt from a book entitled "Border Town Stories" or "A Cold Night in Gordon." He is not sure which title will stick when it is released in the fall of 2007. Magnuson, a native of Omaha, Neb. says his book is about the clash of two cultures that have existed side by side since the late 1800's. "The Lakota people of the Pine Ridge reservation and the residents of Sheridan County, NE have had an economic relationship from the very first time settlers had contracts with the government to deliver beef to the Oglala people" according to the author. Unfortunately the relationship in recent years has been tainted with a couple of unsolved murders and unrestricted sales of an astounding volume of beer.

100 Nebraska state troopers were called into Whiteclay by the Governor when AIM marched on the small hamlet to protest two unsolved murders and a staggering amount of beer sales. Photo is from "The Battle of Whiteclay" by Steve Magnuson.

The author makes the point that in many such relationships, alcohol is often the flashpoint. Alcohol is often the source of tension when two cultures collide and between the residents of Sheridan County and the Lakota, alcohol was always the predictable culprit.

He said, "One of the saddest things I saw was a man in the parking lot

Gaming: opposition support needed

Knudson said he supported SB 167 based on anti-expansion of tribal gaming in the state and the desire to see a balance of the legislative and the executive branch of the state of South Dakota.

Knudson noted that eight of thirty states with tribal gaming compacts allow the Governor to act on his own, and he says that there is enough gaming in the state. Opponents say that such legislative oversight could jeopardize efforts to secure financing for future expansion. Sen. Theresa Two Bulls and Rep. Jim Bradford went on record as opposing this measure, as well as Ron His Horse His Thunder, Chairman of the Standing Rock Sioux tribe. The Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe also submitted written testimony opposing the legislation. Ruth Brown, OST tribal council representative also went on record as opposing SB 167. She said, "We need the revenue from gaming that provides the education that will impact the general welfare of the Oglala Sioux." She said that there are 54,000 tribal members and that the Oglala Sioux tribe wished to go on record as opposing SB 167.

Sen. Theresa Two Bulls, D-Pine Ridge

Sen. Dave Knudson, R-Sioux Falls

Opponents of SB 167 last Friday discussed the merits of the legislative action and included Kurt Luger, Executive Director of the Great Plains Indian Gaming Association. The association represents 36 tribes in the United States and Canada. He noted that tribal casinos in the state represent a total payroll of $30 million and have created 1,700 jobs, many of those being tribal members along with many non-Indians from the local area. Luger said it was easier to deal with one Governor rather than many legislators.

Opponents also noted that the measure is really about recognizing tribes as sovereign entities and a respect for the process. The United States Senate has utilized treaties as an expression of this recognition and the gaming compact amounts to an overlay of that system which has not experienced any problems for over 200 years.

Knudson a long time opponent of gaming in the state noted that the legislature should have the final say on expanding tribal gaming. Harry Christianson of SODAK Gaming also testified against SB 167 and said that there have no abuses of the gaming compacts.

On Monday, the legislative action made it out of the Senate Affairs Committee on a 7-2 vote along party lines and will go to the full Senate floor for debate, according to an update provided by Rep. Jim Bradford. Once the measure is dealt with by the Senate it will go to the House committee for debate and further action. At that time, Rep. Bradford will enter the debate. Bradford said, "People need to email the senators, especially those from the Rapid City area to oppose this. They can exert pressure."

Proceedings on these hearing can be accessed via the internet at http//legis.state.sd.us.

Dillon, Ella John Carlow and Ruth Brown while representatives voting against included: Garfield Steele, Juanita Scherich, Will Peters, Valerie Janis, Kathy Janis and Lydia Bear Killer.

After a complaint against Big Crow filed by fellow council representative, Will Peters, was not accepted by a vote of 8-7, a complaint by Jeff Whalen was accepted on Jan. 5th by a vote of 8-6 with one not voting.

Whelan's complaint centered on the charge that Big Crow was basically acting in the best interests of C&W Enterprises and not the Oglala Sioux Tribe. Whelan charged that Big Crow went out of his way to try to get C&W paid $754,000.00 for shoddy and substandard work done on a base and blotter contract on roads on Pine Ridge Reservation that Big Crow circumvented the policies and procedures of the tribe and went around the tribe's transportation program and at the end tried to set up an arbitration hearing with past South Dakota Supreme Court judge Robert Miller, a man selected to the state bench by the father of C&W's attorney, Russ Janklow, instead of following the economic and business development committees expressed wishes of using the American Arbitration Association who would use experienced engineers in their review.

"Where on this voucher do you see my name, you don't," responded Big Crow, "and where is my name on the request for the arbitration hearing with Judge Miller, it just is not there."

"Because of work that inspectors could not sign off on and after repeated problems on the part of C&W to complete work on time and work that met the necessary standards, we pulled the contract last year," said Whelan, "and after review of work completed we felt that we legitimately owed C&W a little over $90,000.00 not the $754,000.00 claimed by the company and Walt."

"As a tribal council representative, we get many requests to have someone or a group or organization put on the agenda of the committee and I was just responding to one of those requests and on top of that I was really responding to the wishes of the committee to get this matter cleared up as soon as possible," said Big Crow.

In an attempt to keep a sense of decorum in the proceedings of the council, Cecelia Fire Thunder, OST president asked those in attendance in the crowd to refrain from clapping or hollering out comments while the hearing was in session. In response to a number of catcalls and loud clapping, Fire Thunder asked security and law enforcement representatives to remove Ken Heart from the building.

Following the completion of testimony and comments from council representatives, Fire Thunder declared an executive session and removed all non-council people in the building.

After an extended executive session, Paul Little, council representative from Oglala/Whiteclay district made a motion to dismiss the complaint and it was seconded by Craig Dillon, council representative from LaCreek district with the vote going 10-6 in favor of dismissal.

Peters and Garfield Steele, council representative form Wounded Knee District spoke out strongly about the failure of the tribal council to answer the challenge of removing corruption from tribal government and expressed shock and dismay at the council's inability to make a tough decision in the face of what they felt was damning testimony against one of their own fellow council representatives.

At the present time, there is not a strong recall provision on the books for removal of an elected tribal official.

"We have seen the complaint process used way too much in this administration and it is not working," said Fire Thunder, "we need to make it our priority to develop a strong recall process and get it out to the required secretarial election to amend our constitution."

Although complaints may be filed with the secretary's office by anyone, after they are accepted by the council and set for a hearing, it takes a two thirds vote of the council to remove the elected official. Over the last several administrations a number of districts have tried to take out their tribal council representative, to no avail.

"We need to protect the elected official from frivolous complaints but also create a process that allows an elected official to be removed for just cause," said Fire Thunder.

Over the last 20 years, the tribal council has removed three tribal council representatives: Alice Perkins from Wakpamni District, Robert "Chop" Martin of Whiteclay/Oglala District and Cedric Young Bear of Porcupine District.

The council is set to meet on Feb. 9 and 10 to complete the January regular session and to focus on economic and business development committee activities and to hear a presentation by Crystal Eagle Elk, OST treasurer and a detailed expenditure report on the Shakopee loan package..

standing outside of his car. He drained a can of hurricane and slammed to the can the ground and drove off in a car packed with kids."

At this point, the excerpt can be downloaded from amazon.com at a cost of $.49 cents. The author says that the article on Whiteclay will be subtitled, "Life and Death among Nebraskans and the Lakota." The excerpt contains an overview of the three chapters which speak of White Clay and the devastating effects of alcohol sales. Whiteclay is a small hamlet within a stone's throw of the Pine Ridge reservation and its eighteen residents lay claim to the sale of millions of cans of beer per year to a reservation that is considered 'dry.'

Steve Magnuson

Magnuson has always has an interest in the way that cultures intersect. He hopes that his book will serve to bridge the cultural divide between the two populations of Whiteclay. He lived in several Asian countries, including five years in Tokyo, Japan.

He was living there in 1995 when Aum Shimrikyo released poison gas into the subway system. He wrote a novel about that experience called, "The Song of Sarin."

He emphasized the fact that such works can also provide a solution to existing side by side, as it is sometimes necessary for people to understand each other's history.

While conducting his research and interviews, Magnuson noted that most of the residents on the Nebraska side were fairly accessible. He was able to interview former Nebraska State Patrol Colonel Tom Nesbitt. The same was true of the Lakota informants that he interviewed. In fact, he said that out of all seventy interviews, only four were off the record. On the Pine Ridge side, he interviewed Russell Means, Tom Poor Bear, Clyde and Vernon Bellecourt and others. The story also relies on state patrol, FBI reports and court records.

A balanced interview with Nebraska AIM coordinator Bob Yellow Bird Steele is also included.

Magnuson said, "The people were accessible. I was an outsider on both sides. I made six trips in all and the longest one was to do the bulk of interviews in 2003." He also discusses the historical claim that White Clay once was an extension of the Pine Ridge reservation.

Magnuson said that with cultural misunderstanding on both sides, there were some rather stereotypical notions that seem to abound. For example, he spoke of one white lady from Whiteclay who harbored many stereotypical ideas about the Lakota people, but she found it necessary to take her visitors onto the Pine Ridge reservation for a tour. She did not realize that Lakota people were self sufficient in many ways also. He pointed out that there is not a whole lot of contemporary history on the Pine Ridge reservation.

When Magnuson discussed the Yellow Thunder case, he said that many rumors and lies live on and his book will hopefully put some of that to rest. He said, "There is new evidence that I will reveal, things that are not widely known. People don't have to make up rumors because what happened was bad enough."

He said he worked hard to represent the interviews that he conducted in a fair and accurate way and is waiting for feedback about his work. Magnuson also said that there is a chapter on Vietnam Veterans and their very real lives.

About "Border Town Stories" Magnuson wrote, "While the history is regional, I believe the book has universal themes of how fear, misunderstanding and ignorance can poison two communities. Ultimately, I hope the work will serve as a bridge between the two peoples."

In addition to an account of the 1999 marches on Whiteclay, the book also contains the first published history of the town, "from its origin in the 1880's when it sat in the Extension, a buffer zone between the Oglala and nefarious whisky sellers, to is evolution in the 20th century from a town of merchants to a notorious "little skid row on the prairie."

He hopes to appeal to college classes and residents alike around the Nebraska and South Dakota surrounding area with his work.

The excerpt can be downloaded from amazon.com; however, he says that he wants people to have access to it so if they contact him he will send it to them. Magnuson can be reached by email at stewmag@yahoo.com. The excerpt was not downloaded in preparation for this story.

Her Many Horses is new Rosebud BIA Superintendent

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The new superintendent at the Rosebud BIA Agency is Cleve Her Many Horses. A 1979 graduate of Todd County High School, he has come home to make a contribution toward many RST's initiatives as well as carrying out the federal government's trust responsibility to the tribe.

Some of his priorities during his tenure will be to create partnerships with other agencies, while moving the tribe along in its economic development. He would like to re-invigorate the fire fighting crews that the Rosebud has sent out in recent years. That practice apparently brought in a large sum of money for fire fighters and their families.

Bureau wide, there are problems with extraditing probate proceedings due to a shortage of staff and a lack of resources, according to Her Many Horses. Different state laws also create problems for probate hearings, however, the face of probate proceedings will change as the American Indian Probate Reform Act, a new federal law will take effect in June and it prevail no matter which reservation one may own property on. The BIA will also be utilizing new computer software to update its realty and probate functions and this represents a priority for Her Many Horses.

Her Many Horses' siblings are Chico, Grace, Emil, Kathy D'Ann and Steve. He is a 1985 graduate of Black Hills State University having earned a bachelors degree in political science, while distinguishing himself as an ROTC commissioned first lieutenant. He served on active duty from 1985-92. He ultimately attained the rank of Captain which is prestigious, in and of itself, as the officer's commission corps is meant for those with excellent leadership skills. Among Lakota military veterans those in the officer ranks are honored.

He said his wife, Vicki, owns a convenience on the Lower Brule reservation and thus, he recognizes the importance of small business development as a way to create economic opportunities for Lakota people.

An interesting historical note is the fact that Her Many Horses was in Berlin when the wall separating West Germany and East Germany came down. The wall as a symbol of the Cold War was built in 1961 and torn down by the end of 1990.

It is common knowledge that some German people revere traditional Lakota culture. They have a tendency to romanticize Native people, and the East Germans apparently emulate the style of Lakota traditional dress. Her Many Horses said he was amazed at the quantity of eagle feathers and quillwork which came out of East Germany when the wall came down.

Cleve Her Many Horses

Prior to coming home to Rosebud, he was at the BIA Lower Brule agency for seven and a half years. He said he attended to the bureau's trust responsibility while serving as an advocate for the tribe. He said, "There's only so much we can do. I try to tell the tribe's story and uphold the treaty obligations."

He was also the administrative manager for the BIA on the Wind River reservation in Wyoming for four years.

Her Many Horses also noted that, increasingly, BIA administrators on the Great Plains region are more proactive on behalf of the tribes. This may be due to the fact that some of the administrators are tribal members from this region and they try to uphold those tribal beliefs in dealing with tribes.

When asked about the extent of his interactions and contact with the RST tribal council and administration, he said, "I will be at all tribal council meetings. Everything is important."

I had a nightmare; then I had a beautiful dream

BY TOM KATUS
Special guest editorial

My nightmare began when the Rapid City Council voted by a narrow margin to approve zoning for the big box store overlooking Reptile Gardens on Highway 16. Approval was granted despite strong opposition from the Cowboy Indian Alliance, Democracy in Action)women, Rapid City, Hill City and Custer small businesses, conservation groups, poor folks and rich homeowners.

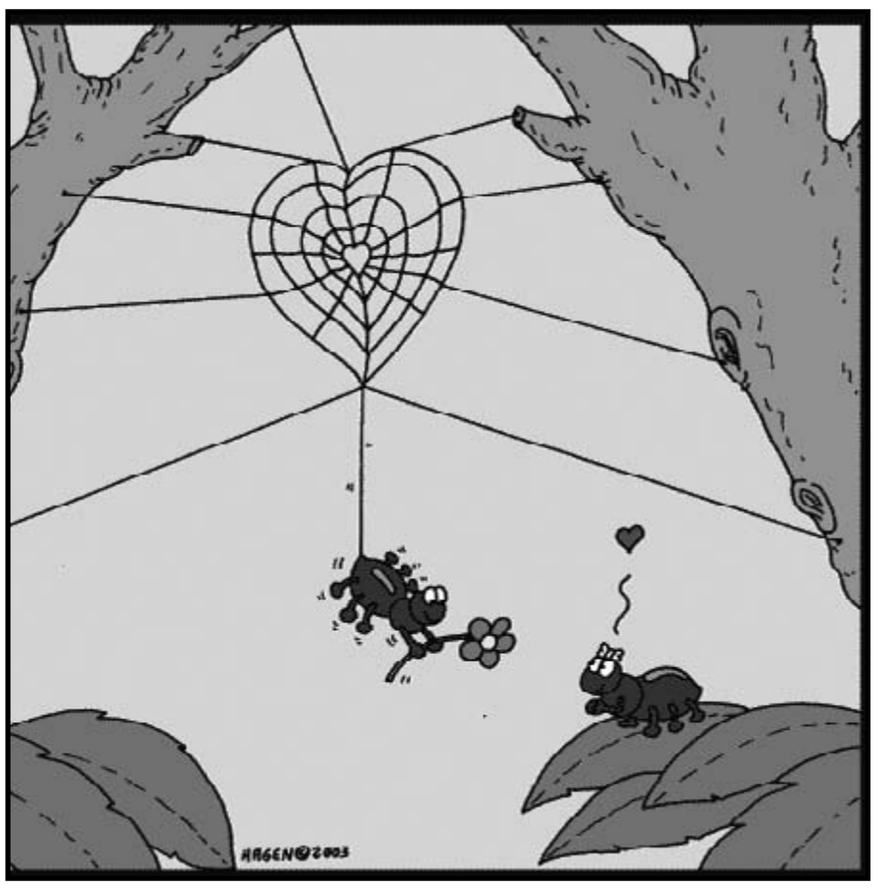
Within two years, other big boxes and urban sprawl filled in all the open areas between the City and Reptile Gardens. The sprawl from Keystone started creeping down from the other direction.

With its mega-billion dollars, Big Box joined with DM & E Railroad and bought signage right-of-way all the way to Mt. Rushmore. They thought it would be especially novel if they put a "Big Head" of each president on top of each sign. Thus, every half-mile from Rapid City to Rushmore, there was a gigantic elevated brightly-lit billboard extolling one tourist trap after another, topped off by a presidential Big Head.

On the other side of each sign, capturing the tourists reading from Keystone to Rapid City, was a huge bright yellow smiley face saying, "Always lowest prices" at the Big Box straight ahead.

Then every tourist trap tried to outdo each other, and soon there was a strip mall all the way from Rapid City to the foot of Mt. Rushmore. Tourists began to grumble, "We came to escape the sprawl of Los Angeles, of Denver, of the East Coast. Now we get the same sprawl but even gaudier desecration. Suddenly, there was a very large and noticeable drop in tourism.

Finally, the angry God of Pat Robertson had enough and loosed lightning bolts. The bolts leveled every sign, and the Big Heads and smiley faces came crashing down. God said, "The people of South Dakota should have learned of my wrath with the Spencer and Oglala tornadoes." This time He sent a gigantic tornado ripping up all the desecration of His beautiful Black Hills-everything from Keystone to Rapid City. He roared, "What God has created, let no man put asunder!"



I awoke in a jolt-then fell back to a deep sleep and had a beautiful dream. This time, in a very close vote, the Council voted against big box sprawl. The have-nots and tourism industry were pleased. All the Highway 16 tour operators worked together and created the Mt. Rushmore scenic byway from Catron Boulevard all the way to Keystone.

Taking a page from the Deadwood Restoration Committee, the Keystone folks restored Keystone to its turn-of-the-century style.

The planned six-mile nature walking trail circling Mt. Rushmore was completed. Now, every 3rd of July evening as the whole world watched fireworks broadcast by CNN, they also saw 30,000 visitors of all races and creeds with their hands clasped together, all dancing a joyous round dance on the nature trail in celebration and thanks.

The dance was led by that giant of a man, Mt. Rushmore Superintendent Gerard Baker.

The fireworks and the pounding of the drum and 60,000 feet in unison awakened the Spirit of the Hills. God looked down on all his creatures-two-leggeds, four-leggeds, flowers and stones-all linked and vibrating together. And God was pleased.

Motel owners promote discrimination

Dear Editor:

My name is Codi M. High Elk - American Horse, I am enrolled member of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, and my husband is Robert American Horse, enrolled member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. We are Alcohol & Drug-free Lakotas living in the twisted world of discrimination

I feel that my discriminated against because I will stay in that filthy motel.

Dear Mayor Shaw;

My name is Codi M. High Elk - American Horse, I am enrolled member of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, and my husband is Robert American Horse, enrolled member of the Oglala Sioux Tribe.

I have had a terrible experience this past week.

My husband recently been employed by the Oglala Sioux Tribe at the Hope Lodge Treatment Center, located in Rapid City SD. On January 28, 2006 I have called all over looking for a room to rent for the week so my husband can attend his job. Well, what I thought would have been good, turned out bad. I have found a single room at the Colonial Motel on East North Street. The woman told me that when my husband gets into Rapid City and it is after hours, to ring the door bell. However, when arriving to Colonial Motel at 9:30 p.m., there was not answer so he had to rent another room for the night.

Monday January 30, 2006: Robert (my husband) tried to check-out of the room and requested for a refund, the woman said "NO REFUNDS, NO EXCEPTION" How can she keep our money when he didn't use the room on Sunday night.

But we had no other money to buy a room, so he went to stay in the room on Monday, but there was drinking and fighting going on all night, there was a bad odor in the room, like chemicals.

Also, there were roaches in the room. He checked out and just staying one night, we should have received our money, but night's rent. The woman made a statement "Damn if you get your money back". I don't think this is very professional and best business practice. I have taken further action as reporting this complaint to the office of Consumer Protection in Pierre SD.

You stated RECONCILIATION among the Native People of Rapid City and surrounding area. We go to Rapid City for personal and business. And this is the first time that we were ripped off by a business.

My requests are the have the Colonial Motel Refund my money back and have the motel inspected. It is a health hazard and not in livable conditions. You will not want to rent a room in those conditions.

I am a Full Blood Lakota and I am not a DIRTY INDIAN.

I am young, but I feel so old

Dear SAS: I am writing because I feel so alone. I am young, but I feel so old. I came back from the war ready to pick up my life where I left off. My boss held my job for me, and my family welcomed me home. It has been a year since I returned and now I find myself having difficulty even getting out of bed in the morning. I have no energy; I just want to stay home and not be bothered by people. I have been missing work because I am so tired. I find myself crying over the smallest things and it is becoming embarrassing. Some days I feel so sad I can't stand it, but I don't understand why I should feel this way. I am afraid I will lose my job if this continues. What should I do?

Dear reader: What you are describing sounds like you may be experiencing a depressive episode. However, if it has been awhile since you last had a medical check-up, it would be good for you to see a physician to rule out other potential medical causes for what you are experiencing.

Soldiers who have returned from a war often experience painful memories, or have problems readjusting back to normal life. Sometimes losses occurred and a soldier did not have time to grieve the loss. Regret or guilt may be present and that compounds the feeling of sadness. Depression can make a person feel exhausted, sad, worthless, helpless and sometimes hopeless. It sounds like you were expecting everything to be okay once you returned home and now find yourself frustrated that things seem to be getting worse rather than better.

There are forms of depression that run in families in which case a chemical imbalance in the brain may have a genetic component.

Otherwise, depression often results because a person does not have the coping skills needed to manage current stress. In your case, the stress might be the transitioning itself from military to civilian life. Because one gets so focused on "picking up where they left off" there isn't the awareness of how war changes people. Bosses expect the same amount of concentration to the job and work production that was present before the employee was deployed. The employee/soldier feels the pressure to get "up to speed" and there may have been changes in the workplace while the employee was deployed. This can involve staff changes, changes in processes or procedures, or new equipment that one needs to learn how to operate. At the same time the returned soldier is trying to navigate the workplace, she may find that the military is still ever present in her mind. Memories of military life or events of war can surface and break concentration. She may also find herself saying, "in the military we did it this way….." as she tries to transition from a very structured military workplace to the more informal civilian workplace. Frustration mounts when co-workers do not respond as one would like. Job satisfaction begins to decline and it is easy for the employee to become sad and discouraged.

What is important is that you get help for the symptoms you are describing. A mental health provider can talk with you about what you are experiencing and teach you skills to help with the depressed mood and stress that may be causing it. Other things you can do involve participating in activities that make you feel better as long as it does not involve using alcohol or drugs. Alcohol itself is a depressant and will only make matters worse. Try mild exercise to stimulate body and mind. Spend time with others who can provide support. Check local newspaper listings for support groups that meet in your area and attend one. If you would like more information you can contact the VA, the National Institute of Mental Health, and the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill or access their websites.

Bear Butte buffer zone defeat sad for spirituality

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

It is a little disheartening to see that House Bill 1233 was killed last week. The bill sponsored by Rep. Jim Bradford and others would have established a four mile buffer zone around the sacred Bear Butte and call for the prohibition of alcohol sales in that zone.

My first reaction was that the vote was probably along racial lines, but after looking at the votes, it appears that there were three who voted against killing the bill because they voted their conscience and demonstrated a great deal of respect for the sacred site.

In this day and age of exploiting the Black Hills and expanding business development, it amounts to a terrible detriment to the wilderness regions. The fact that Lakota people regard this area as sacred and inseparable from our original homeland is easily lost in the economic development shuffle.

The whole issue of desecrating the land within close proximity of sacred Bear Butte is difficult to accept especially when one is being responsive to a majority of their constituents and who want their representatives to vote against anything that is near and dear to the Lakota people. They simply refuse to make the analogy that society does not generally condone erecting bars and outside entertainment venues next to churches and other shrines.

It almost reminds me of the opening scene from "A Man Called Horse" in which these hunters were creating a raucous and their behavior was so inappropriate that it made one laugh. They were disturbing the serenity and natural beauty of the land. All wild life probably knew to keep their distance as the outsiders were frightened by the noise.

There are some cases in which officials seem to 'get it.' Not long ago a couple of men were arrested for illegally shooting a mountain goat near Rockerville. The mountain goat is a highly prized trophy and the state only issue two permits each year. There are some things in nature that simply should be protected because of their inherent spiritual and enduring value to the people.

I think it shows very poor taste to allow alcohol to be sold so close to Bear Butte. It's not enough that the whole summer rally is a disturbance to the whole area and though it makes millions, some things in nature are simply not for sale. It's impossible to put a value on something as sacred as Bear Butte.

In society, majority rules and it is disheartening to see that the majority of people will vote to allow alcohol anywhere near our sacred sites. I have not researched the timeline of when the state assumed control over Bear Butte and designated as a state park, but if you are going to protect something why not protect it all the way. With all the land surrounding the town of Sturgis, why not issue a permit for an outdoor bar miles from anything.

There must be many bikers who have a good conscious about desecrating and tromping on sacred land and they need to be educated in some fashion. It points up the importance of getting out accurate and crucial information to the public in some concerted fashion so that they can see the predicament and make up their own minds. The battle lines are fairly even when society wants to open up the wilderness for any kind of exploration or business development and it is up to us to continue to educate others about the need to keep Bear Butte undisturbed.

There are many Native and environmental types who understand this issue and I would encourage you to continue to support the Defenders of the Black Hills in any way possible in this effort. The encroachment that is coming out of this will never stop until they have it all, but at least we can all register our voice and displeasure.

I read one essay written during World War II and this writer something like, one day they came after one of my comrades and I kept silent. The next time they came and took my family and again I kept silent and did not say a word. The next time they came and took me and no one said a word.

This simple essay points out that it sometimes necessary to say something even if we feel it won't make an impact. There are people in all walks of life that will tread upon our freedoms and their actions are very insidious as we never truly know from which quarter they originate from.

Notes From Indian Country

Finding the ugliest car on the reservation

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Where have all the gas-guzzlers from the 1960s, 70s and 80s gone?

On a recent trip that took me to the Pine Ridge and Rosebud Reservations in South Dakota I found most of them. Yeah, that's right. Those huge, overweight, lumbering Fords, Chevys, Pontiacs, Oldsmobiles and Chryslers have all ended up on the reservations.

How did they end up there? Travel to any town bordering an Indian reservation, we call them "bordertowns," and you will find unscrupulous car dealers whose main goal in life is to unload these outdated, gas-sucking behemoths sitting on the car lots just waiting for the suckers to check them out.

But that's just a part of the story. Most of the time the price on the car is far above what it is worth and the easy down payment, 24-months (or more) payoff plan has so many legal loopholes favoring the dealership that by the time the innocent buyer knows what hit him or her, they have paid two to three times the value of the car at interest rates that would raise eyebrows in any other part of the civilized world.

Granted, there are those Indian people with poor or no credit rating at all. But they need a car for grocery shopping or to take mom, pop or grandma and grandpa or the children to the nearest Indian Health Service Hospital. Fortunately there are busses to take the kids to school.

On vast reservations like the Pine Ridge, 100 miles long, 50 miles wide, or the Navajo Nation, 25,000 square miles, it is almost a matter of life and death to have a car or truck.

Grocery stores of any size are usually in the larger communities on the reservation or in the border towns. The same goes for clothing stores, auto repair shops, tire shop or places where one can buy appliances like refrigerators and washers and dryers.

Elders often buy gasoline and kick in a few extra bucks to relatives and friends to drive them to the store, to the Bureau of Indian Affairs office, the main office of the tribal government or to the hospital. This practice is as common as hitch hiking or walking. Drive to any large reservation, even in the dead of winter, and you will see Indian people walking alongside the roads in the middle of nowhere.

I am no longer amazed at those Lakota people who put just enough gas in their cars to make it to, say, Rapid City. And after they get here and take care of their business, you will find them in the parking lots of grocery stores or knocking on the doors of friends and relatives in an effort to raise enough money to buy the gas to get back home.

After securing some older busses, the governing body of the Pine Ridge Reservation is starting a reservation-wide bus service in order to accommodate those tribal members without the means to purchase a car or truck or who cannot drive because of physical handicaps. So many tribal members have had limbs amputated because of the disastrous effects of diabetes.

We (Indians) joke amongst ourselves about "Indian cars." These are usually cars with broken windows, dented fenders and with tail pipes and bumpers held on with bailing wire. They are also those huge gas-guzzlers I mentioned above. "Hey, did you see that junker Little Moon is driving? That is really an "Indian car,"' we say in jest.

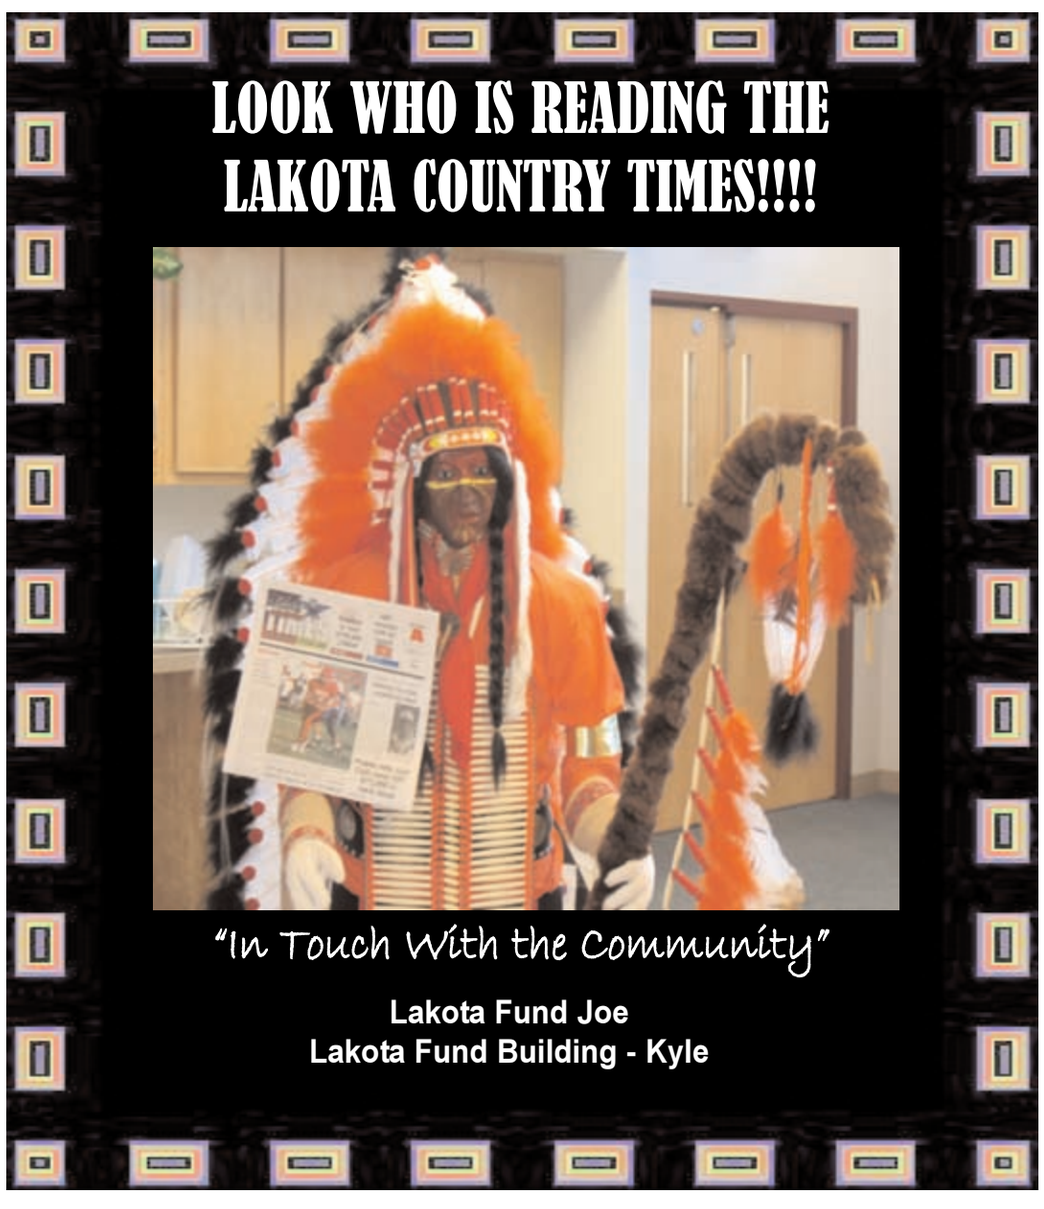
There is a weekly newspaper on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation in Montana called "Wotanin Wowape." It has been published for more than 20 years and most of the staff has been working there that long.

In the old days the editor Bonnie Red Elk and her assistant, Minnie Two Shoes, used to hold an "Ugliest Car on the Reservation" contest. Whenever their newspaper arrived at my office with the winner of this contest, my staff and me would hold our sides in pain from laughing so hard. There were so many ugly cars entered in the contest that the unbiased judges at the newspaper had a heck of a time selecting the winner.

Of course, we used to joke that if Fort Peck would let some of the people from Pine Ridge enter their cars in the contest, our Lakota car owners would win hands down.

On a more serious note, when environmentalists tried to convince Congress more than 30 years ago to force the auto makers in Detroit to build more fuel efficient cars, it was the Big 3, Ford, General Motors and Chrysler, that screamed like wounded coyotes and fought any legislation designed to bring about this change, to a standstill. And then they just went on building their next generation of gas-guzzlers, the huge trucks and SUVs.

Ford and GM both announced the upcoming layoffs of thousands of workers and the closing of many plants. Toyota and Honda, two companies that listened to the consumer and did build more gas efficient automobiles, pounded the Big 3.



Where would these financially shaky automobile companies be if they had listened to the environmentalists 20 or 30 years ago? Perhaps they would now be growing instead of shrinking.

wish they would come to the Indian reservations and pick up all of those outdated gas-guzzlers and replace them with the new fuel-efficient cars they are now trying to produce. For the automakers it would be like stepping back in time and realizing what a big mistake they made.

Pine Ridge strings together three close mid-season wins at home

Thorpe wins tighten up seeding for District 14A

PINE RIDGE - Pine Ridge opened a week of three tough games at home on Tuesday with a hard fought 65-62 win over St. Francis, followed it up with a 54-50, come from behind, overtime win over Cheyenne Eagle Butte on Friday and polished off the week with another come from behind win over Little Wound 54-50 on Saturday.

St Francis came into the Thorpe house after earning "Honorable Mention" status with the Class A Top Ten poll and sporting a 12-2 record and quickly went up 6-2 and 8-5 in the first quarter. Pine Ridge came right back with five different Thorpes chipping in on the scoring led by Michael Jack's two threes and a two and Austin Red Shirt's two field goals deep in the paint to give the Thorpes a 19-13 lead at the quarter break.

Although St. Francis tied it at 31 just before the half and tied it again at 61 all in the fourth quarter, Ryan Pourier kicked it in gear from the second quarter on to lead Pine Ridge to the three point win. Pourier scored throughout the second and third quarters with four field goals and a free throw in the second and five field goals and a free throw in the third. Pourier finished with 25 points and six rebounds as both John Provost and Jeff Big Crow helped with ten points a piece. Provost added four assists, three steals and six rebounds while Big Crow finished with five steals and a team high eight rebounds.

After getting the early lead and finishing with balanced scoring as four Warriors scored in double figures, St. Francis was never able to regain the lead after the first quarter.

"We used up a lot of energy playing catch up with Pine Ridge and we just couldn't get over the hump," said Roger Crow Eagle, St. Francis coach, "we didn't make good decisions down the stretch and just couldn't wrap up a win on the road."

Travis Spotted War Bonnet turned in a 17 point night with five steals, five rebounds and three assists, Kris Leroy scored all 12 of his points in the first half, JJ Arcoren helped with 11 points and Taylor Brushbreaker had three threes and 10 points while the Warriors moved their record to 12-3.

On Friday, Jess Mendoza brought Daelan High Wolf and the Cheyenne Eagle Butte Braves to Pine Ridge for a rematch of the Lakota Nation third place game six weeks ago in Rapid City, a game CEB won 37-27. Mendoza coached for eight years at Pine Ridge wrapping up his tenure with 26-0 State championship season in 1987. High Wolf played for Pine Ridge his freshman and sophomore years before joining Jess in Eagle Butte for his last two years in high school.

Big Crow and Provost led Pine Ridge to a 14-8 first quarter edge but High Wolf led the Braves right back to a 22-20 halftime edge. Both teams kept the pressure on in the third and held their opponents to nine points so CEB still held a two point edge at the end of three 31-29.

Behind Provost's seven fourth quarter points, Pine Ridge forced overtime and Big Crow put the pressure on quickly hitting a three early in OT and added two big free throws; CEB needed more than High Wolf's three and didn't get much else as Pine Ridge pulled the game out in overtime 54-50.

Provost took team high honors for Pine Ridge with 20 points and Big Crow helped with 13 while Austin Red Shirt grabbed 10 rebounds. High Wolf did not disappoint both his new fans and the old fans hitting 26 points and grabbing eight rebounds and Charlie Marshall had a team high six rebounds. Beau Kingfisher finished with ten points.

CEB took out Crow Creek 47-44 in overtime on Saturday to put their record at 6-9, they travel to McLaughlin on Tuesday and host Pine Ridge on Saturday.

On Saturday, Little Wound played without their sophomore point guard, Brice Hornbeck and were looking to avenge the two defeats this year at the hands of the Thorpes. The Mustangs went up early as Willis Zephier and Rich Big Boy led the way, holding a 13-9 edge at the quarter. Little Wound led at the half 28-25 and built a 41-31 edge in the third quarter.

JC Dillon came out in the fourth with guns ablazing for Pine Ridge, hitting two quick threes, John Provost knocked down his own three and a couple of twos to go along with it and that quick the Thorpes were back and in the lead. For the second night in a row, turnovers made a difference as Little Wound had 11 second half turnovers to six for Pine Ridge. Provost led Pine Ridge with 17 points as the Thorpes move their record to 10-3 and hit the road for the next four games, Tuesday at Bennett County, Friday at Crow Creek and Saturday at CEB.

Little Wound got 15 points and eight rebounds out of Big Boy and 11 points from both Willis Zephier and Devon LeBeau and is now 10-4 and hosts St. Francis on Thursday and travels to Mobridge on Saturday.

All three teams, St. Francis, Pine Ridge and Little Wound are competing for the top two seeds in 14A and the opportunity to host a first round district game. St. Francis is 12-3, Pine Ridge is 10-3 and Little Wound is 10-4 with three weeks left in the regular season.

Red Cloud opens six game homestand with strong wins over Todd County and Rapid City Christian

On Thursday, Red Cloud opened up a ten point lead in the first quarter and never looked back as they finished with a 70-56 victory over the Todd County Falcons for their tenth win this season against four losses.

With eight different players scoring, the Crusaders went up by as many as 30 points before settling for a 14 point win. Chris Red Bear hit three threes on the way to 13 points, David Giago hit his career varsity high of 14 points and Johnny Crow finished with 11.

Red Cloud easily got by Christian and now hosts Chadron on Tuesday and Crazy Horse on Thursday with Hot Springs the following Tuesday and Scottsbluff on Saturday to close out the homestand.

Red Cloud was moved over to District 15A this year and is battling Custer for the number one seed in the district and whoever wins 15A has the prospect of facing number one St. Thomas More in the Region 8A championship game in early March.

Lady Falcons knock off highly rated Mobridge

Sunni Busch sends notice - Todd County will be a force to be reckoned with down the stretch

BY TOM CRASH
Time's Correspondent

MISSION - Last year, Todd County traveled to Mobridge and knocked off the number one rated Class A girls team in the state, this year Mobridge came to Mission, undefeated and rated number two in the state at 16-0 - same result, Todd County played a strong game on both ends of the court to pull out a 57-44 upset win over the previously undefeated Lady Tigers.

"We are a better team now than early in the season, we are over most of our injuries and we are definitely playing better defense," said Chuck Wilson, Todd County head coach, "there were times when we would spread the floor and put Sunni on their big girl and there was no way she was going to cover Sunni Busch one on one."

The Lady Falcons took control in the first quarter finishing with a 13-8 lead and increased their lead each quarter after never letting up until the final buzzer. Busch led the way with 21 points and 15 rebounds, Red Cloud transfer Mandi Morrisette, a sophomore point guard helped with 12 points and Kali Jenkins grabbed 11 boards and chipped in with eight points.

"When it comes down to it, it is defense, Char did a good job on their big girl and we constantly doubled up on their outstanding guard, Brit Fuhrman," said Wilson, "we are playing good team ball and playing a lot of players and playing hard."

It is good to have Char back close to full speed and to have Kari Tow Lance contributing is a great help, added Wilson. Morrisette played a good game, she is playing smart and is making a real contribution, Wilson related.

Todd County wraps up their regular season with a game at Eagle Butte on Friday and finishes a schedule that includes 13 road games at South Central on Monday. After losses to Bennett County in the first game of the season, Custer in the LNI and to Little Wound on the road, the Lady Falcons are now 15-3 and looking to finish the season strong and head into the postseason. Last year, Todd County won 13A, got by Bennett County in Region 7A and took sixth in state.

"We really need a better schedule to help prepare us for the second season; we have LNI and are in two West River conferences and we need to get better at playing a variety of teams," said Wilson, "Sunni and Char have really dedicated themselves to a great season, the whole team wants to make it back to state and make use of the experience gained from going last year but we are going to take it one game at a time and not look ahead."

Bennett County picks up wins against Pine Ridge and Valentine this week

On Thursday the Lady Warriors muscled their way past Pine Ridge 80-47 on the road and came back on Saturday to beat Valentine 72-51 at home to up their record to 16-1. Bennett County hosts Kadoka on Thursday and travels to New Underwood on Friday to close out the regular season.

"We have come back this year with a stronger and deeper team," said Jeff Krolikowski, Bennett County coach, "at Pine Ridge we took it to them right away and started quick going up 6-0 and stressed our defense and of course our running game and against Valentine we had to pound it inside to Abby, they had some really quick guards so we are better able to adjust to the strength of our opponent this year."

Pine Ridge's Lacey Weston got into early foul trouble and Bennett County's balanced scoring set the tone for the Lady Warrior's 15th win of the season. Kratovil finished with 25, Maggie O'Neill added 15 and Keely Krolikowski chipped in 14. Against Valentine, Kratovil dominated the paint with 35 points and 12 rebounds, O'Neill helped with 18 points and Krolikowski only had four points but finished with 11 assists.

Bennett County's only loss this year was at the Hanson Classic, a 52-50 loss to Stickney-Mt. Vernon.

"We are not looking ahead, we know that both Little Wound and Pine Ridge could be real tough in the districts and then there is Todd County in the region," said Krolikowski, "but we feel we can play with anyone in the state, we set our goal of winning state this year and I don't think that is an unrealistic goal - we have a real unselfish team and distribute the ball to wherever it helps the team the most."

Little Wound knocks off rated Kadoka and heads for the finish line

Little Wound opened up a 12 point first quarter lead behind the hot shooting of point guard Tyann Pourier and cruised to a 68-56 win over previously undefeated Kadoka.

For Little Wound it marked their 15th win of the season against two losses. The Lady Mustangs close out the regular season with three home games next week, hosting St. Francis on Tuesday, Eagle Butte on Friday and Crow Creek on Saturday.

Kadoka pulled within five at the half but Little wound went back up by 10 at the end of the third and finished with a 12 point win against the Class B school rated sixth in the Top Ten poll.

Pourier finished with a team high 17 points, Sadie In the Woods added 15 while Nichelle Red Owl helped out with 14.

Struggles continue for Crazy Horse girls

After losing to Pine Ridge in the Lakota Nation Invitational back in December 130-10 and struggling to field a full team, Crazy Horse closed out their girl's program for the season and told the teams on their schedule that they would end up forfeiting the rest of their games.

In late January, there was some new energy and a few more players, so Crazy Horse restarted their season last week. The Lady Chiefs opened with a 105-18 loss at Red Cloud on Tuesday and then went to New Underwood on Thursday and suffered an 88-0 shutout against New Underwood.

EMERGENCY SERVICES

The Rosebud Comprehensive Health Care Facility provides 24 hour Emergency Services. When you present to the Emergency Department you will be greeted by a Medical Support Assistant that will ask for your name, date of birth and/or chart number in order to obtain your medical record.

You will be TRIAGED by a Registered Nurse within 15 minutes from the time of your arrival. The Registered Nurse will ask you for your Chief Complaint (What brings you to the ER?) and will obtain vital signs (blood pressure, pulse, temperature, respirations, height, weight and pain scale).

NO patient will be turned away from the Emergency Department. Triage is a process that assists the medical provider in establishing the order in which the patients will receive a Medical Screening Exam and care/treatment. Triage is NOT a Medical Screening Exam.

Triage levels are as follows:

Level I: Non-Urgent
Level II: Urgent
Level III: Emergency

Just because you signed up first does not necessarily mean that you will be seen first. Patients that present to the Emergency Department will be seen in the order of their Medical Priority, which is determined during the Triage Process.

A Medical Screening Exam (MSE) is a process. It is the continuation of an initial assessment during an Emergency Room visit. It is NOT for the purpose of excluding patients from care or for financial reimbursement. It is a Legal Responsibility of the facility. CONTRACT HEALTH SERVICES

Important Facts You Should Know About Contract Health

IHS-CHS Coverage is not automatic. Should you have an emergency situation requiring you to obtain care at a non-IHS facility, you must notify the CHS office at 605-747-3215 OR 605-747-3216 within 72 hours. If you fail to notify the CHS office you will be responsible for any bills you incur.

IHS-CHS Coverage is for Emergent, Life-Threatening situations. Sore Throats, earaches, and medication refills, etc., are not considered emergent or life threatening. IHS-CHS will not cover a visit if an IHS Facility would have been closer. CHS does not cover medicatons.

If you visit a non-IHS facility you MUST sign a release of information to provide this information to the CHS office. The CHS committee cannot make a decision without sufficient medical information. In most cases a referral is limited to one medical treatment and/or appointment.

CHS Eligibility Criteria: You MUST be an enrolled member of a federally recognized tribe. You MUST reside within the Contract Health Service Delivery Area (CHSDA) which covers the counties surrounding the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Reservation. If you are a non-member of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe you MUST reside within the reservation boundaries.

Eligible Veterans: A patient will apply and utilize alternate resources if the individual is eligible. This is pursuant to IHS Regulation, 42 CFR, Part C. Purpose: To ensure patients receive the resources they are qualified for/or entitled to. To inquire about eligibility or to apply for benefits, contact the local Veterans Health Administration Center in Hot Springs at 1-800-764-5370 or the Rosebud Veterans Center at 605-747-2593.

IHS-CHS Approval: Please do not request preauthorization from the Indian Health Service. The CHS Committee must review all referrals and call-in requests. The CHS Committee approves or disapproves the referrals based on medical facts presented and the CHS criteria being met. The committee is the only authority to approve or disapprove.

IHS-CHS Payor of Last Resort: The Patient MUST apply for any alternate resources for which they may be eligible. A denial from the alternate resource is required for reconsideration by the CHS Committee. You may contact the Patient Benefits Coordinator to assist in the application process for alternate resources. Please call (605)747-3213 for further information. CHS Guidelines require all patients under the age of 18 and all pregnant patients apply for Medicaid.

Non-Compliance With the Approval Process May Serve as the Basis for Denial of Payment by Contract Health Services:

Payment Process: When a patient has Medicare, Medicaid, CHAMPUS, Private Insurance, Workmen's Compensation or is covered by another resource, that resource is considered the primary carrier. All Explanations of Benefits (EOBs) from the primary carrier(s) must be brought or mailed to the CHS office without delay when received by the patient. Many times the Non-IHS provider will turn the patient's bill over to a collection agency because the provider is unable to obtain an EOB from the patient. It is Very Important that you provide this to the provider of the CHS office in order to complete the payment process.

There are many medical conditions in which certain over the counter medications could cause harm or untoward side effects if not appropriately used. Therefore, in an effort to ensure the safety of our clients we will no longer be providing over the counter (OTC) medications without seeing a medical provider.

The Pharmacy Program is currently experiencing a high volume of prescriptions and a staffing shortage. We ask for your patience and assistance in meeting the needs of all of our clients when calling in for Pharmacy refills. We ask that you try to call at least 2-4 days in advance for your refills.

Clients/Patients have the option of calling and asking to speak directly to a Pharmacist or you have the option of using our new automated system.

The Automated System allows clients/patients to call and leave their refill requests by calling 747-3268 without having to wait to speak to a Pharmacist. When using the automated system you will need to provide your full name, chart number, medication name, prescription number and number of refills remaining. All of the information can be located on your medication bottles.

URGENT CARE

The Rosebud Comprehensive Health Care Facility provides Urgent Care for non-emergent medical conditions. Patients can present to the Urgent Care on a Walk-In basis seven (7) days a week between the hours of 9:00AM to 9:00 PM.

Urgent Care can be accessed by entering the Emergency Department entrance and the Urgent Care window is located to your left. Upon presenting you will be greeted by a Medical Support Assistant who will ask for your name, date of birth and/or chart number in order to obtain your medical record.

You will be TRIAGED by a Registered Nurse within 15 minutes from the time of your arrival. The Registered Nurse will ask you for your Chief Complaint (What brings you to the ER?) and will obtain vital signs (blood pressure, pulse, temperature, respirations, height, weight and pain scale).

Triage is a process that assists the medical provider in establishing the order in which the patients will receive care/treatment. Just because you signed up first does not necessarily mean that you will be seen first. Patients that present to Urgent Care will be seen in the order of their Medical Priority, which is determined during the Triage Process.

What types of conditions are seen in Urgent Care?

- Cough
- Cold
- Flu
- Earache
- Sinus Problems
- Sore Throatadache
- Muscle aches
- Joint pains
- Arthritis
- Ankle sprain
- Burning with Urination
- Diarrhea
- Cuts greater than 24 hrs. old
- Back pain

Young soldiers willing to sacrifice everything

BY EMILY CROOKS
South Dakota State Universtiy

War wrenches men and women from their daily lives. It demands for them to stand u and walk away from the homes they know, the jobs they hold and the people they adore. It demands that soldiers that soldiers leave it all - and they do.

They step into the cold metal airplane, their boots thumping sorrowfully and with one last, long gaze, they turn and disappear.

The door closes, the airplane crawls away, slowly picking up speed. It then lifts, higher and higher, until even the dot it once was fades into the endless blue.

Only then do the mothers turn from the now empty runway. With a steadying breath they prepare for an unknown number of days, months or even years awaitingthe return of the man or woman they once held as their child.

While these men and women are defending the stars and stripes, Native mothers are left to pray and wait.

Linelle Hairy Shirt, from St. Francis, understands the waiting. She understands the wondering and uncertainty. On Feb. 17, 2004, she watched her daughter Jaime Knox as she proudly boarded a plane destined for Iraq.

Because Knox enlisted in the Army as a 17 year-old high school student, her mother had to give her written consent.

"I did not want to do it," said Hairy Shirt, she said she asked her daughter who had put her up to it because she could not understand why Knox wanted to join.

Hairy Shirt did sign for her daughter though, and two days after finishing her junior year of high school Knox left for basic training. She returned to finish her senior year at St. Francis Indian School.

Since Knox, the first woman on either side of her family to enlist in the military, has been in Iraq, Hairy Shirt has had temporary custody of her 19 month old granddaughter, Catalina.

Hairy Shirt said it has been hard to see all of her granddaughter's firsts knowing that her daughter should be seeing them as well.

Students visit reservations to talk with Native American War veterans

BROOKINGS - Journalism students from South Dakota State University traveled to five reservations in South Dakota to learn more about Native American veterans during the fall semester of 2004.

With a grant from the John S. and James L. Knight Foundation, students from the advanced reporting class, photojournalists and broadcast journalists visited the tribes of the Flandreau Santee, Rosebud, Pine ridge, Standing Rock and Cheyenne River reservations.

The students interviewed, wrote stories and photographed Lakota and Dakota veterans for a special publication that was prnted by the South Dakota Observer.

The SDSU journalism department has given permission for Lakota Country Times to reprint some of the stories and photos from the special special edition.

Advanced reporting class included, in front, Victoria Riggs, Chelsea Boeva, Kayla Morrill and Erin Hanley, In back are Wendy Royston, Nicolle Wiekeamp, Tonia Goertz, Emily Crooks, Doris Giago, Laura Haatvedt and David Pego.

Doris (Brewer) Giago, associate professor for SDSU for 14 years and Oglala Sioux member instructs the students not only in the field but for cultural sensitivity. She said this is the sixth special publication the journalism department has published. Others includes impact of tribal colleges, Northern Plains tribal artists, elderly stories in Medicine Root District of Kyle, math and science, engineering and technology in Indian country and preserving the Lakota language. If there is an interest in the publications, Giago can be emailed at doris.giago @SDSTATE.EDU.

For many of the students this was their first visit to a reservation. "I have lived in South Dakota for nearly 30 years, and this class trip was the first opportunity I had to

'It's a heart-wrenching experience

Memories and images remain after serving a year in Iraq

BY EMILY CROOKS
South Dakota State Universtiy

When he was in Iraq, he lived in a desert tent with a whirlwind of sand-storms and only 5,000-gallon water tank with no re-supply. Missile and chemical bombs exploded, and children begged on the road. These images are now part of Chris Christianson's memory.

Christianson

Christianson, 31, lives in Sioux Falls with his two sons, but two years ago he was halfway around the world. Like many other Native American soldiers, Christianson left his home and family, to take up a gun and step headlong into the terror of war.

A member of the 323rd Army Reserve Chemical Company of Sioux Falls, Christianson was alerted for activation on Feb. 7, 2003. Two weeks later, he and his company found themselves in the remote deserts of Kuwait. After stepping off the plane, Christianson and the 180 other company members were immediately ordered to grab their gear and get moving.

The group had walked straight into a bomb alert. When they finally made it to their camp-or what was supposed to be their camp-they had another surprise.

"It was not at all what we expected. We were attached to Marines who were based on a camp by themselves. We had 5,000 gallons of water and five or six port-a-potties. It was a mess. It was a waiting game; waiting for equipment,' Christianson said. Christianson, originally from Sisseton, said the hardest part of serving was the separation from his two sons. "All of 2003 just doesn't exist-broken bones, saxophone concerts," Christianson said.

"You miss those things when you're not there." What he didn't was a sign reading "Now entering Iraq. Don't feed the children" or the swarms of small souls, dressed in nothing but robes and sandals, scavenging for anything left by the soldiers. "It's a heart-wrenching experience to keep going," Christianson said. He didn't miss the vendors flooding get to know next-door neighbors on the reservation, "said Victoria Riggs, a senior from the advanced reporting class who lives in Arlington. "I was honored to be so welcomed by them. Listening to their heartfelt stories of their dedicated military service raised my understanding of patriotism to a higher level, "Riggs said. While on the Pine Ridge reservation, students had the opportunity to participate in a sweat lodge ceremony. For Denise Watt, a photojournalist from White, the ceremony was an experience she will not forget. "It was in the midst of this [prayer lodge] with sweat pouring out of my body, that I realized my ignorance," Watt said. "I had lived here all my life and never made an effort to understand the American Indian culture, or even just where they, as a people, are coming from. What I found to be valuable about the trip was an immersion into a culture other than my own."

But the main purpose of the trip was to interview the Native American Veterans.

Advanced student Nicolle WieKamp was surprised by how the interviews affected her. "The interviews changed the way that I look at the past and the way I look at others. These people were so nice and willing to share their personal stories with us, complete strangers," Weikamp said. "That just blew me away" Kyla Morril, advanced reporting student from Clinton, Minn., appreciated the opportunity to learn about the Lakota and Dakota cultures. "I think the trips were a good opportunity to learn more about a different culture," Morril said. "This class gave us the chance to immerse ourselves in the culture instead of just standing on the fringes."

Three broadcast majors-Cliff Chandler, Shanda Sundstrom and Cory Wilson, traveled with the print journalism majors to document the special project. They produced a 28-minute documentary, "The Journey," which follows all students to all five reservations and videotaped many of their interviews. During the spring semester of 2005, students in the advanced editing class designed and edited the publication. Faculty involved in the project included Doris Giago and David Pego, advanced reporting; Frank Klock, photojournalism; and Lyle Olson, advanced editing. The students involved in this special project say they were grateful for the opportunity to work on this issue.

"It touched each of us with memories that will never be forgotten," Riggs said.

He doesn't miss a car bomb attempt or having to search the car and cuff the driver. "You bring back a lot of memories," Christianson said, "and what I will (also) take is the drive, motivation and structure; I will hold on that. And the friends. For a year in Iraq, that was my family."

months of her growing up," Hairy Shirt said. Her daughter has missed her baby's first tooth, her first word and even her first stumbling steps.

"That's the hardest thing, seeing all of Catalina's firsts and knowing her mom should also be seeing them," Hairy Shirt said.

"I'm proud of her but I can't say I'm glad she lost out on all the time with her daughter," Hairy Shirt said.

Worry for her daughter is a daily constant for Hairy Shirt. "My mom used to tell me, "Don't be crying, you're going to make her weak in spirit. Just pray for her," said Hairy Shirt. "Pray for them, pray for them and pray for them."

Another Native mother, Lillian Tobacco also understands the uncertainty of war. She watched her eldest son leave for the Persian Gulf War and her daughter for Iraq, and also waits to hear where her youngest son will be stationed next.

Coming from a family of military service, Tobacco, 58, exudes a strong pride in her children's service. "I tell myself that instead of crying, accomplishments are made. My sons, my daughters are out there protecting the country," Tobacco said.

With determination, Tobacco has set out to help others deal with the doubts and fears tat come from watching a loved one leave for war.

During the Persian Gulf, when her son served, Tobacco went through a lot. But this Pine Ridge Reservation resident went through it alone. Now she does whatever she can to make sure others have someone with whom they can share their worries, doubts and fears.

"I have my ears open for those who want to talk," Tobacco said. "I do my best to help them."

Not only does Tobacco help others cope with their feelings, she strives to stir up pride and thankfulness toward all veterans.

"What really makes me sad," Tobacco said, "is the Vietnam era. Nothing was done for the families and tribe. It should have been. If I had been older, I'm sure I could have done something."

Tobacco exudes determination and strength as she "does something" now.

She organizes prayer vigils, raises money for anything from the Women's Memorial in Washington D.C. to a local Legion hall. She encourages others through public speeches, awards blue star banners and offers her shoulder for support.

Tobacco encourages those left watching when the plane carrying their loved one disappears into the unknown. "Stand tall, be proud, Remember that's part of you over there."

Man recalls Battle of the Bulge

Military a tradition for Pine Ridge family

BY WENDY ROYSTON
South Dakota State Universtiy

Delmar P. Richards and his five brothers, from the Pine Ridge Reservation, all served in World War II. Richards was stationed in Europe, the family's youngest son stayed stateside and the remaining four brothers were in the South Pacific. Richards was a member of the Army while his brothers were all enlisted in the Air Corps.

Although the brothers all saw a lot of action during the war, the six returned home safely. But Richards, 82, encountered a close call during the Battle of the Bulge in Bastogne, Belgium.

As squad sergeant, Richards was the machine gunner who led the left flank as the German forces attempted to get at the seaport.

"They told us to hold it at all costs. That means until the last man. (The Germans) tried to break through us, but they didn't get it done," Richards said proudly. "We held them."

He said his unit was often one of the first to be involved in major conflicts.

"They had a saying, they sent The Red One and then the rest of the Army," he said. "I told my men, 'No prisoners! Kill them all!'"

The German corporal escaped according to Richards, but he said he thought the unit succeeded in killing the rest of the German unit.

"It's hard to count them when you are trying to stay alive," he said.

Richards said the Germans remembered his unit. "The Germans said the Red One was made up of gangsters," he said. "They said, 'They're crazy! They don't fight fair!'"

But the Germans did get their shots in, too. One of them even struck Richards during the Battle of the Bulge. "I was shot through the arm, and it creased my stomach."

He said he was told that if the bullet had punctured his stomach, he likely would have died. "Them Germans are mean," he said. Even after being shot, Richards kept up with the battle.

"I was wounded, but I still kept firing," Richards said with a smile.

To stop the bleeding in the battlefield, Richards said a medic stuck a pencil into the wound and wrapped string around it. Richards was then taken to a Paris hospital, where he recuperated for two months.

"When I got well, they asked if I wanted to go to a different group," Richards said. "I said I wanted to go back to my division and see who was alive."

Most of his fellow servicemen were still alive and with the unit when Richards returned.

Richards was highly decorated due to his World War II efforts, but he said he was scared throughout his time in battle. "If somebody said he wasn't scared, he's a liar," Richards said noting, "There's no atheists on a battlefield."

Military duty separates family

Mother recalls memories of leaving her daughter to serve her country

BY LAURA HAATVEDT
South Dakota State Universtiy

Dresses in dark, tailored jeans and a light gray sweater, standing less than five and a half feet tall with shoulder length sleek black hair, Jaime Knox doesn't look like someone who had just spent the last year fighting in Iraq.

She hugged her almost two-year-old daughter Catalina, and a soft smile came over her face as she began to tell her story.

This 22 year-old Rosebud Lakota enlisted in the Army Reserve while she was in high school. Now she's with National Guard's 153rd engineering battalion. "It was hard at first," she said as she fought back tears. "I missed my family a lot. I missed her first birthday. I hope I will be home in time for her second."

While many people in her situation would have left the military, Knox switched from the Army Reserve to the South Dakota National Guard just before having her baby so she could be closer to home.

She had made the decision to join the Army five years ago, during her junior year of high school. "I knew that coming from a small town and having the friends I had, I would end up getting into trouble if I stayed around here," she said. "I wanted to go out and see things for my own. I didn't want to be dependent on anybody else."

While many girls her age spent their summer prior to their final year of high school having fun with friends, Knox attended basic training. "I had heard it was tough. I wanted the challenge" she said. "I had fun though. It was like summer camp."

She was still in Advance Individual Training for the Army Reserve when 9/11 happened. "It was in class. The alarms started going off," Knox said. "That's when I had the first inkling we might have to go."

Still, she when first heard that her guard unit, the 153rd, had been called in active duty she was shocked. "We were uncertain, because we didn't know what our mission was going to be," she said.

When she first joined, she was able to be with Catalina often, but now she had to be away from her daughter for a long time. "I try not to think about her or my family during the day," she said. Nearly everyday, their camp, an old power plant, is under attack. Her unit is often the target of brutal mortar fire. "I get scared, but I also feel safe," she said, "because I trust our guys."

The men are an infantry division whose job is to disassemble roadside bombs. This mission is called Pathfinder. Knox's job is basically maintenance. She is responsible for ordering parts for their trucks and equipment. "We are like family," she said. "We get through it by sticking together. It's hard, but we get through it together."

She said her family, especially her grandmother, was one of her life's biggest influences. Her grandmother gave her the strength and courage to do the things she's done. She also shares her heritage and culture with Knox and her daughter. "I hope I can tell stories the way she did," she said. "I look at this experience, and I will have a story to share."

Although Knox said she has never felt discriminated against in the Army, she did say that she would occasionally have to explain herself and her culture. "Some people have preconceived notions," Knox said. "Not really the guys in my unit, because a lot of them have been around (other Native Americans) but I do have to tell some people, 'No, we're not really like that.'"

Knox said she probably will not reenlist when her time is up, but she wouldn't change a single thing despite what she's been through.

"I am proud to have served my country," she said.

Soldier finds peace in helping others

Vet reaches out to those dealing with pain, after effects of war

BY ERIN HANLEY
South Dakota State Universtiy

The unrest and distress in the life of a veteran is disturbing. Many combat veterans, of any conflict, are afflicted with horrible memories of their military service. In South Dakota, American Indians are trying to ease the pain of some of the vets. Vietnam veteran Leon Red Dog, 55, knows the pain of war. He spent a year in combat and was a leader in several confrontations. But when he came back, he wasn't hailed as a hero but as a killer in a rejected war. "I negotiated with the Creator. I said if you let me go home I'll help the kids of our reservation. But, when I did come home, I forgot about the deal I negotiated. I went back to drinking because that was the only way I could sleep," Red Dog said. Now Red Dog is part of a program of psychological counseling and spiritual cleansing for wounded soldiers.

He's gone through the program himself to deal with his own demons. His mentor, Grandpa (Frank) Fools Crow, preformed the ceremony and eventually taught Red Dog.

"The nightmares, suicidal thoughts, anger and rage were the actions of that 18-year-old who went to war." "One thing I do is try to work up to the top. I was a police officer, then chief of police. After I got to the I burned out, resigned there, and became counselor of the alcohol program, and now I am director of the program," Red Dog said.

Red Dog performs a ceremony to cleanse veterans of their ailments. He takes the veterans through a sweat that lasts two to four days. The veterans talk about what they did and felt in war. The first part of the sweat is just talking, but at the end the veterans ask for forgiveness for what they did in the war and the spirits they wronged. "They want to talk, which is all right with me because I remember what I went through. I understand where they're coming from so I do my best to be there."

Many veterans find solace in the ceremony. Many are grateful for the opportunity to express themselves. Richard Charging Eagle, also a Vietnam veteran, went through the same ceremony with Grandpa Fools Crow. "He told me the people you did wrong are going to be here in spirit. I didn't believe it. The people I killed, the ones I done something wrong to, came and pulled my hair and poked my eyes," Charging Eagle said

Charging Eagle, Red Dog and many other veterans are grateful for the ceremony. "Today I can function like a human. If I hadn't gone through that ceremony I probably would be talking about alcohol. I keep telling my vets to share some of it, get it off your chest. Tell somebody," Charging Eagle said.

Some military veterans deal with PTSD for life

Rates among natives are very high

BY TONIA GOERTZ
South Dakota State Universtiy

PTSD. Talk to any combat veteran, victim of sexual or physical assault, or most emergency services personnel long enough, and those four letters will eventually make their way into the conversation. Most know that those letters are the acronym for post-traumatic stress disorder, but may not really understand that in the simplest terms, it may mean devastation for many veterans and their families if they do not seek help American Indian veterans are especially at risk, according to The Matsunaga Vietnam Veteran Project. This comprehensive study, done by the VA and released in February 1997, extended the scope of the National Vietnam Veterans Readjustment Study (NVVRS) to include other minority veterans. It showed about one in three American Indian Vietnam veterans who served in country suffered from full or partial PTSD sometime since Vietnam. The incidence of PTSD for American Indians is very high, more than twice as high as for white or Japanese American Vietnam veterans.

The study concluded that the unique cultural traditions, society and family experiences of each different ethnic group played an important role in the veteran's homecoming and readjustment after Vietnam, but they do not appear to either cause or prevent PTSD. For Martin Bernard, a 55-year-old Native American veteran from Flandreau, who served as a combat medic in Vietnam from 1969-1970, and has service connected disabilities of diabetes from agent orange exposure and PTSD, it means years of carrying around regrets. "When I was in the field and people were wounded, I hadn't been taught what to do. I felt kind of inadequate, like I could have done more, I should have done more, I wish I had known more," the Vietnam veteran said. Was he disabled when he came home? "I didn't know that I suffered from post-traumatic stress when I came back. I came back to the spit and polish of the army. A big change after living in the jungles and mud. I just couldn't adjust so I drank a lot. I went AWOL for six months but finally went back and got my honorable discharge. The Army was never the same after I came back from Vietnam."

Bernard said he tried to kill himself about 20 years ago. He said he "pretty much just dropped off the face of the earth and just didn't do anything, didn't really work. I don't know I just thought I was normal; nobody talked to us about PTSD." Bernard said that he continually replays his war-time actions in his head and asks himself if he could have done more. He is still second guessing himself. You wanted to be the best, you wanted to help those guys, you know, you did your best at the time, and you can think about that now but you say to yourself, wow, I could have done this more," he said.

"There's times I got blood on my hands over there being a medic, and when I suffer through some of them episodes, I get up and wash my hands, wash my hands, wash my hands. My wife says, 'Why are you washing your hands again? You just washed them.' Thirty four years later he is still trying to wash the blood off his hands. While Bernard is just one man with just one story, it is a story that reflects the lives of thousands of veterans. While there is no cure for PTSD, there are ways to help those with PTSD learn to live with the problems in a less destructive way.

Only child begs to serve in the Army

BY LAURA HAATVEDT

For many American Indian veterans, the decision to serve their nation was easy. "If anybody was going to be killing Germans, I wanted to be in on it," Woodrow Respects Nothing, from Manderson said.

From 1941 to 1945, the United States was at war with Germany during World War II. As an only child, Respects Nothing wasn't supposed to be able to join the military.

But, after a lot of pleading, he was allowed to enlist. "We talked until the recruiters face was blue and we signed some papers and they let me go," said Respects Nothing, now 81 years old. He was among 75 "Indian kids" from the Pine Ridge and Rosebud reservations who boarded passenger trains in Valentine, Neb., in May 1943.

En route to training, Respects Nothing was asked which branch of the Military he wanted to join. "I said, 'I'll take the easiest one, the Army.' " After basic training, the newly enlisted were offered and 15 day leave, but Respects Nothing turned down the opportunity.

Army buddies: Woodrow Respects Nothing, right, and a friend.

"Why would I go back if I had such a hard time getting in?" he said.

Because they had turned down the leave, Respects Nothing and two others were relocated to an alternative unit and headed to Texas Army base for further training.

Following his instructions, Respects Nothing was to remain stateside due to his single-son status, but he was not content with remaining out of conflict. 'I wanted to see what it was like. I wanted to fight," he said. "So, my company commander talked good for me." Soon, he was able to go into battle with the rest of his unit. Respects Nothing was part of the D-Day invasion on the beaches of Normandy.

He rode into Utah Beach on a flat-bottomed boat carrying 40 men, ready to fight. "I couldn't swim," Respects Nothing said. "I was of the Germans. I thought we were going to drown, all loaded down with ammo and grenades, but we made it." Respects Nothing who grew up on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, had never seen the ocean before joining the Army and had never really had the chance to swim. Respects Nothing went to school on the reservation until he enlisted in the Army at the age of 19.

Later in the war, Respects Nothing earned a Bronze Star. During a period of intense enemy fire during battle, Respects Nothing fired rounds from a mortar into the tubes and raise it over his shoulder. On March 7, 1945, he saved the lives of several of his fellow soldiers and prevented others from being captured.

On Dec. 15, 1996, his 73rd birthday, Woodrow Respects Nothing received his Bronze Star, over 51 years after that heroic day.

Vietnam vet shares observations on PTSD

Editor's note: Tim Swimmer, 58, is a Vietnam veteran who served in the 101 Airborne Division in the U.S. Army. He is a member of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe and lives in McLaughlin. He learned how to deal with post traumatic stress when he went through treatment on three occasions, the latest n 1997. Following are observations:

"At the medical center in Wisconsin I began to understand what PTSD was and the effect the war had on me.

There was a lot of isolation, shame, guilt, and depression, anger. I talked about suicide…I used to have a lot of rifles. When I ran off one time, my wife took all my rifles and sold them.

It took me over 30 years to really talk about my experiences in Vietnam. Yet, it still hurts; it still bothers me. I have a lot of reactions after I talk about things like this. I always look at it like this: it's a healing time for me.

Going to Vietnam at 18 I didn't know what to expect and how to cope. When I came home after two years, I turned to alcohol and drugs. I figured if I could get so drunk I could go to sleep and not have to dream about this. I don't have to react to the nightmares.

From the time I was 23 to 29, I don't know what I did a lot of the time…to live with the flashbacks, to live with the nightmares was something I couldn't hardly handle until I scared the family one time.

I was working at veterans industry and went home after work. Just as I walked in the door an ambulance siren went off. I reacted to it. I started throwing cups. Whatever I could grab, thinking that they were like hand grenades or something…I broke every cup we had in the house. And I scared the family. They left. My wife understood what I was going through. It was just that anger that turned to rage.

In 29 years we were married we moved over 30 times. In each place I thought it would be good, so we moved. It was quiet and comfortable for awhile. After six, seven months or so I started reacting to nightmares, flashbacks. I thought, there's something wrong with the house. I'd tell the wife, and we'd start looking for another place. I think in one year we moved seven times. It's called geographical escape because if you couldn't understand something, if you couldn't handle something, you'd move to escape.

My family knows what will set me off - a 5 o'clock, 6 o'clock whistle blowing, police siren, ambulance siren, car honking, car backfiring, a chair falling on the floor when I'm not expecting it. Anything that has a booming noise. Even a baby crying sets me off. In Vietnam when we went into villages, babies were crying everywhere because their mammas were lying there…we couldn't touch them because they might have been booby-trapped. We were told to stay away, don't touch them…so when my children's children start crying I ask them to take her upstairs or do something to stop the crying because I can't stand it.

After I went to PTS therapy I sat all my kids down, and I explained to them what PTS means and what I've experienced, what I might do. So they all know what to do if I react.

I'm still battling with depression. I've pretty much worked through the shame and the guilt that we were made to feel when we got off the plane. And that was one of the hardest things to deal with. That's why a lot of veterans don't want to talk about it.

At night to sleep, I have to have a radio going or have the TV going or have a night light on. In the day time if I'm having a bad day, I'll close the blinds and leave just enough light to just sit there and self-talk. I talk to myself until I feel better. It's something that I've learned to live with. And now I've learned to comfort myself with my self-talking.

I believe to be a survivor you have to be willing to face the task, whatever it may be. And I faced the hardest - two years of Vietnam and then 30 years of reliving what I'd seen, what I experienced over there in Vietnam.

I told my kids, you're survivors. You put with a lot from me. I know I've put a lot of fear in you kids, but you stuck by me. Now you have families of your own. Work at what you're doing, live the best way that you can. Look forward.

I'm still dealing with a lot of things today, but I share with my family so they can prepare themselves to that if anything comes up in their lives, they've learned what to do. I told my daughters, 'You're my treasures but y grandchildren are the apples of my eye.' That's why I do what I can and I work so hard at overcoming a lot of these issues in my life and what I've experienced."

Korean War changed men's lives

BY CHELSEA BOEVE
South Dakota State Universtiy

At a time when most people their age are thinking only of their retirement years, three American Indian men look back on their service in the Korean War.

Eugene Iron Shell Sr., from the Pine Ridge Reservation, served in the U.S Army from 1947 to 1956 and was in Korea in 1951. Iron Shell was sent to Korea in the 187th Airborne Regimental Combat Team that was in charge of controlling Korean war protestors who were armed with few weapons-most of which were homemade. The weapons used during this assignment reminded Iron Shell of childhood games such as cowboys and Indians.

Iron Shell joined the service at age 18. It was a family tradition going back several generations. Iron Shell's great grandfather fought the United States government and rode with crazy Horse many years ago.

For many American Indians, it is an honor to have served their country, and such service is frequently recognized through community celebrations and reunions. "It has always been in our make up to fight," he said. Earl Siers is another American Indian who spent time in the Korean War. Near the end of the war, Siers and the 809th Combat Engineers were sent to Korea to help with the clean-up and redevelopment.

Siers, who is from the Rosebud Reservation, enlisted in the U.S Army from 1954 to 1960. He helped remove war mines and built new housing development while in Korea.

While away, Siers continued to stay in touch with those back at home and sent his mother half of his monthly pay check to help her, and his brothers and his sisters. Siers said he served his country as part of his culture and as part of a tradition that continues today. Basil Brave Heart of the 187th Regimental Combat Team also served in Korea from 1951 to 1954. Brave Heart joined the service to help pay for his education. While Brave Heart was still in Korea, he was injured and returned to the Pine Ridge Reservation. Later, he decided to go back to school and received his bachelor's degree and two master's degrees.

Brave Heart still thinks about the war. "It has been 50 years and I still have flashbacks," Brave Heart said. Just the smell of gas and oil or the sound of a helicopter spinning sends Brave Heart into a panic. "War is hideous and should be avoided at all costs," Brave Heart said. "I will be living with thoughts from the war for the rest of my life."

Because some veterans turn to alcohol as a way of dealing with the post-traumatic stress disorder, they become victims of alcohol abuse. Brave Heart is now a member of the Lakota Red Feather Society. The group consists of veterans who were in combat and have remained sober for several years.

"In war you kill the enemy, but wound your own spirit. This is why many Native Americans turn to alcoholism and even suicide," Brave Heart said.

"We are spiritual beings just trying to be human." Since his return, Brave Heart has finished his education and taught at Pine Ridge.

He later became superintendent of the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Throughout the challenges and trials in that position, Brave Heart relied on his military training on many occasions to help him make the right decisions, "The military helped me to look at the bigger picture," Brave Heart said.

Women start reservation Legion posts

BY KAYLA MORRILL
South Dakota State Universtiy

The American Legion is typically a male organization with the Legion Auxiliary reserved for women.Two Legion posts in South Dakota, however, were started by women for women. Post 321 of the Pine Ridge Reservation and Post 305 of the Standing Rock Reservation are not only women's posts but American Indian posts.

Legion Post 321 was chartered in April 1997 with 14 women. Twelve of the charter members are still active in the post today, with 20 total members, 16 women and four men. Post commander is Iva Good Voice Flute, an Oglala Lakota who served in the United States Air Force from 1991-1995.

Post 321 sponsors many activities for its community. Members serve meals for military families and attend military burials, parades and powwows as honor guards. The post's goals include drawing attention to Lakota military women, military women overall and to women's issues in general.

Post 305 was chartered in 1998 with 15 women, and the post has 32 members (seven active) today. The post commander is Claudette Luger and they attend fuctions just as Post 321.

Both posts try to recruit people into the armed servicesby attending school careers days and bringing in recruiters to the reservation.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna:

I am writing to you in a very emotional and stressed state. I attend college classes and we've recently started back and I've already put myself in a panic.

I've been told if I pass all my classes this semester I can graduate with my degree. My concern is do you see me graduating this spring?

Am I going to make it or will I not succeed? I want to also continue on further so I can work with people and children. Presently my job is paying my bills, but do you see me succeeding in my training and schooling and also my personal life?

Sincerely stressed

Dear Stressed:

You have been on a long journey towards this goal. I do see you graduating, but there is a chance that it may not be until summer (or possibly fall - if you take the summer off), instead of spring.

I do see you working with children and eventually, starting some sort of business/center/program for children and young adults. In your personal life; I see that you have two men in your life; neither should be considered as "the one." I see these friendships moving into the past as you open your heart for true love, probably late in 2006 or early 2007.

Good Luck, and relax, your life is good. You have a false sense of being in a hurry so please learn to take your time. Rome wasn't built in a day, a masters degree doesn't come without the cost of the time; a bachelors degree takes as long as it takes, and the only things that don't take time in this world are things that are never considered.

Even things that never happen take time - through thought and worry. Time is not your enemy, it is your life-long companion. Remember, don't rush through life. The only moment you have is right now. Enjoy it.

Dear Anna:

Hello! First of all, how did you get your abilities? And how long have you had it? Does it have its ups and downs being a psychic?

What do you see for my marriage? He takes off every time we argue. What do you see employment wise for me?

There was $100 missing from my husband's wallet, do you see what happened to it?

One last question, my daughter is being harassed by a neighbor; she is called names and the neighbor has threatened her and my other kids .

Private

Dear Private:

Well dear, if you write to me at the paper, I must answer through the paper…but I have cut your letter and removed from it any information that would point out to anybody who you are or where you live. I will always protect people's identity.

In answer to your questions about my psychic abilities, I got them from the "Creator," and genetically. My great-grandmother was a gypsy (on my mother's side) with the last name of Domski (I am not sure of the spelling) from Armenia.

She and my great-grandfather traveled all over the U.S. in a wagon, telling fortunes and selling "snake oil." My mother and father were open-minded but did not over encourage me to spend my time in the future. They understood that I was psychic by the time I was three, when information that I had saved two young girls' lives.

They listened to me, but often argued about not only what I saw, but how I interpreted it. They did not always follow my advice, but they always loved me even though they both referred to me as a "nut."

After working many years until I was in my late 40s, in standard corporate America jobs, and working at the same time for friends and confidants telling them of the future, I knew that there was something else for me to do, and that I could never very easily work in a structured 8 to 5 job or career. I would always end up at opposite ends of the spectrum concerning management practices and business practices. I would always see my company's folly and I always battled with management over their lack of vision.

Eventually I would quit just before they fired me. Businesses, I found, would implement my suggestions, but never like me for "making them feel wrong." I have found that a better way to approach most businesses is from a consultant standpoint, where people want me to help them with my vision. The struggle has been very long, very sad, very discouraging and has taken more bravery than I could have ever guessed that I had. I have moved all over the country to help people.

The Creator and my guides (Spirits) have been with me all the way. I have fought hard against badness or misguided people, and bad policy: governmental, criminal, business and personal relationship wrongs.

I have fought hard to let people know how very powerful they are, and that they are part of the Creator. I had a vision in 1987 and it lasted better than a month. I saw many things from the future and it scared me.

I prayed, and the Creator sent me on a long journey. During that time, I lost all of my family (they all died) (except my two sons) four homes, various cars and all my furniture, friends, and every personal item I ever had and of course any chance at a descent credit rating. The saddest thing I had to do was to have my ex-husband take my son for a few years (because organized crime was trying to kill me). I gave my life to the Creator to help - and there you have it, here I am. Am I helping?

Sometimes I think I am, sometimes I know I am, and sometimes I just plain think I am not of any help to anybody. I have been chased by bad guys, shot at, spit at, ridiculed, threatened, poisoned and drugged, and generally harassed. It has made me strong. I don't like to use the word psychic. I am a "seer," and a healer. If you want to be more psychic there are many easier routes to take than the one I was given.

Everybody has intuition, or latent psychic ability, but calling it forth is created simply though desire. Sometime soon, I will teach a small seminar in developing your own intuition to better avail yourself to a bigger view of life. It can help people in their business and personal lives but there are some hazards. Many psychic professionals have still not figured out how to use discernment to screen out fear/negative energy or that type of consciousness and "see the truth." Many psychics scare people really badly because most of what they see is negative and based on the worst possible outcome. Blessings to you for asking me.

Now for your reading: Your marriage is so stressful. You are aware that there is love in your heart but love fades when it is not reflected back at you. What you get back is discontent. Your husband is restless and has a need to try and belittle you.

It is only a matter of time before you and him separate. He wants out, or at least acts that way, but is afraid (money and family) to make that move. Time will move him and you. Don't worry, you don't have to do anything, it will run its course and you both will decide not to be together. If you feel particularly unhappy, you can force a fight, and he will leave - that is what I see, but I recommend you take another route. If you force a fight, you will have regrets.

The $100.00 was not stolen. It was "lost" in an organized way (gaming).

Please go ahead and file a restraining order against your neighbor. I see her involved in some potential danger for your children, and a restraining order will help you. Find some sympathy in your heart for that woman, she has some signs of mental illness, but you don't have to be her victim.

Dear Anna:

I was in a bad relationship a couple of years ago and got out of it. Now here is my problem: I cared very much for this man, I gave him my heart but I now know that it was not a good relationship and it will not work even if we tried again.

My problem, I am seeing someone now and I cannot get this other person out of my mind and heart. I want to trust, love and have a relationship but when I am with this new person, all I can think about is the other person. I need and want this person out of my mind and heart so I can go on. I was hurt to bad and I am also having a very hard time trusting this new person. He's good to me and I know he cares for me, but I can't share this with him because I don't want to hurt him.

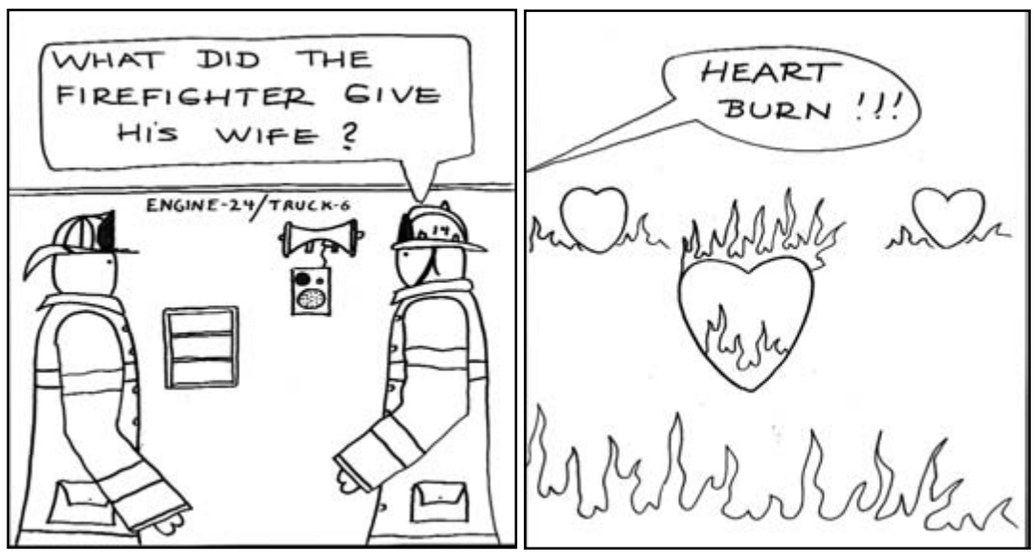
Do you see this new person and I having a future? Will I ever get over this past relationship? Should I just give up on ever being with anyone?

Sincerely,
Wants to move on

Dear Wants to move on:

Addiction to a fantasy is very difficult to put aside. This type of relationship has a string of attached addictive energy holding you to a non-existent, fantasy. Please look at this man as really who he is, do not include memories of when you were first together - as that time is not a very good demonstration of who either of you are. Both of you were pretending to be much nicer and more amenable than you actually usually act.

Please take time to consider all that your ex said and did. What he did and said does not reflect caring or love. It reflects more of who he really is: a man preoccupied with a physical relationship, selfish with you, and emotionally immature - which leads to abusive relationship tendencies. You owe yourself the truth. Don't nurture your addiction to the "idea" of this man with feelings of guilt or responsibility for his bad behavior. Think of it this way, you can't go forward and find real love as long as you are not in your full power, as long as you are giving your power to a misguided dream. Release what is not good for you and you will find your balance. You can release through honesty, forgiveness of self, and acceptance that everything is in Divine Order and is exactly as it should be. If you reenact your relationship with this man, the only thing you will realize is the same thing you realized before - it's a circle to despair.



Blessings and good luck.

Diabetes Prevention classroom education efforts make a difference

BY NATASHA D. BORDEAUX
RST Diabetes Prevention Public Relations Specialist

ROSEBUD - Do you know how much exercise your child should get each day? Or what an appropriate serving size of spaghetti is?

Well even if you don't, there is a good chance that your child knows, thanks to the RST Diabetes Prevention classroom education efforts.

RST DPP fitness assistants and nurse educator Buffy Grimshaw spent the entire month of November as well as a few days in December and January to spread the message that "Nobody has to develop type 2 diabetes!"

They focused on teaching kids how to adjust their eating habits toward healthier foods and snacks, appropriate portion sizes and emphasized the need for 60 minutes of heart-raising exercise every day.

"I've heard really good comments at different schools. One mother said her daughter really absorbed the material we taught, she said, 'Now we can only eat wheat bread at our house,'" said Grimshaw.

Grimshaw also said one classroom in St. Francis Indian School, Jackie Johnson's 4-A, did very well on an impromptu quiz a couple months after their Diabetes Prevention education presentations.

"They knew how much exercise they needed to get and that they should drink more water and less pop. They even remembered most of their serving sizes," Grimshaw said. In fact, that same classroom has scheduled the RST DPP to lead regular physical activities with its students in an effort to achieve the full 60 minutes per day of exercise.

"Since we have done our education I've heard a lot of positive comments from parents," Grimshaw said.

RST DPP Director Connie Brushbreaker said the education was designed to put the power of good health into the youth's own hands.

"Knowing what to eat, how to eat and how to balance that with exercise is important to becoming a healthy adult. With support and guidance from parents or guardians, every single one of those youth could grow up without ever having to suffer the effects of diabetes," Brushbreaker said.

The RST Diabetes Prevention education team visited all classrooms in the following schools: St. Francis kindergarten through 12th grade; White River kindergarten through 12th grade, Todd County High School; Todd County Middle School; South Elementary; North Elementary; Rosebud Elementary; Lakeview Elementary, Okreek Elementary; Klein Elementary; Spring Creek Elementary; He Dog Elementary; White Eagle Christian Academy; and Littleburg Elementary.

Education presentations and regular physical activities can be scheduled upon special request to RST Diabetes Prevention Fitness Specialist Marc Marshall, or Nurse Educator Buffy Grimshaw at 747-4600.

Wagner ER survives another deadline

SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (AP) - An Indian Health Service emergency room in Wagner will remain open, at least through the end of September, Sen. Tim Johnson D-S.D., said Tuesday.

The center was to eliminate its overnight and Sunday hours and switch to an urgent care clinic at the end of January. Yankton Sioux tribal members worried that decision would put patients at risk, and officials at nearby Wagner Community Memorial Hospital were concerned it could inundate their emergency room.

Johnson, Sen. John Thune, R-S.D., and Rep Stephanie Herseth, D-S.D., have asked IHS to maintain the Wagner center's current hours until a new study is conducted.

``This announcement is great news for the Yankton Sioux Tribe, as well as a huge benefit to the community at large,'' Johnson said in a news release.

The emergency room survived two previous deadlines in the past four months _ one on Oct. 1, the beginning of the fiscal year, and another at the end of the calendar year. Both times, IHS extended the 24-hour service.

Thune applauded the IHS decision to keep the Wagner Service Unit open but said it's only a temporary solution.

``The WSU emergency room is a vital facility for the families of the Yankton Sioux Tribe, and I will continue to work to see that the current hours are sustained on a permanent basis,'' Thune said in a release.

Herseth said, ``This decision is a testament to the resilience of the Yankton Sioux Tribe and underlines the importance of this facility to the community it serves.''

She said she plans to introduce a resolution in the House that urges the IHS to maintain the 24-hour service.

Doctors, officials worry about impact of childhood obesity

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) - Pediatricians in Indiana are treating a growing number of overweight children for medical conditions typically associated with what their grandparents face - clogged arteries, high blood pressure, diabetes and severe joint pain.

They warn that unless the nation's epidemic of childhood obesity is curtailed, the government and employers will end up footing the enormous medical bills for obesity-related illnesses.

Experts say that many factors are to blame for childhood obesity: overeating, lack of exercise, the wide availability of fattening foods, an increase in TV watching and video game use, along with a general lack of attention to the problem.

Some doctors even report adults in their 20s having heart attacks.

Although many overweight kids will not see the most dire consequences of their condition for two or three decades, experts worry about what will happen before they hit middle age if they don't change their ways.

``Instead of getting diabetes in their 50s, they'll get it in their 20s,'' said Roland Sturm, a senior economist at California's Rand Institute. ``The sooner they are obese and out of shape, the earlier the health problems.''

American drug and alcohol survey to be conducted at Shannon County schools

BATESLAND - On Feb. 15, students from grades 4-8 will be participating in the American Drug and Alcohol Survey in cooperation with the Tri-Ethnic Center of Colorado State University. The funding for the administration of the survey comes from a federal grant awarded to the Tri-Ethnic Center, which allows the survey to be conducted at no cost to the school.

Participation in the ADAS is voluntary. Parents that wish to withdraw their child from participation may do by contacting the principal at each respective school. In addition, a copy of the survey is available at the school for parents who would like to review it. The Shannon County School District believes that the participation in this survey will assist the school district in planning, funding and evaluating drug and alcohol prevention programs.

RST walkers hope to lose 4,271 pounds!

12 week Walking Club Challenge helps tribal members reach health goals

ROSEBUD - Challenging themselves to walk their way to better health, walkers with the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Diabetes Prevention Program Walking Club have a long road ahead if they expect to reach their goal of losing a collective 4,271 pounds, but the odds are in their favor.

"I know we have a pretty good chance of getting close," said RST DPP Director Connie Brushbreaker. "If everyone tries their best to walk a minimum of three days a week, we could get off to a very good start."

Brushbreaker emphasized that the RST Diabetes Prevention's 12-week Walking Club is designed as a way to get people together to encourage and support each others healthy habits.

"It is just the beginning for most people. We don't expect people to reach their goal in the 12 weeks we just hope we get them off to a good, positive start."

The Walking Club was officially underway as on January 3.

RST DPP has enrolled a total of 171 participants, 36 teams and 14 individuals.

A new Body Composition machine has made goal setting easy for all Walking Club participants who wish have their body compositions read.

Each walker was "hooked-up" to the machine with small elctrode "stickers" for a few seconds while the machine gauges the body's pulse and other vital readings.

The machine's print-out gave each walker a complete reading on percent body fat, lean body weight, fat body weight, calories they should consume in a day, total body water as well as recommendations for target health goals.

Fitness Assistants also recorded each participants height, weight and calculated their BMI (Body Mass Index). They measured their waist, hips, chest, arm, thigh and calves to compare with the end-measurements after 12 weeks.

White Face's celebrate 62 years

PORCUPINE - Isaac and Zona White Face were young at heart as they appeared at the Mother Butler center on Saturday, Feb. 11, in Rapid City for an honoring which marked their 62nd anniversary.

The honoring was part of a wedding celebration between Lisa Marie Young Bear and William Jumping Eagle Jr., who were married Jan. 27.

The public was invited to a sobriety dance with the Country Charms of Rosebud. The Lakota couple first met at Gordon and Alliance, Neb. and spoke with pride about their secret to longevity in their marriage. Isaac said, "There are no secrets between us." The couple have four children with daughter Charity White Face the only one left. They also have 15 grandchildren and 22 great children.

Isaac is Oglala and Zona is Sicangu and he said, "When we were married, that was when the (good natured) war started between Rosebud and Pine Ridge." Zona is originally from the Norris area and her maiden name is Bear Shield.

Isaac's cousin, Mary White Face, works at Little Wound School and is a part time deejay on KILI radio helped coordinate the event.

Isaac is a World War II veteran and speaks proudly of his service in Ft. Knox, Ky. and the Aberdeen Proving Grounds in Maryland. Isaac and Zona are hard to catch at home, as they o kan sla omni pi.

Bush's proposed budget cuts Indian programs

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

WASHINGTON, DC - The long awaited rumors about budget cuts in Indian Country may become reality if President Bush's proposed cuts are passed by Congress. The assumption is that there will be consultations and public hearings before the proposed cuts are voted on in the future. The proposed cuts will have dire consequences for many other grant programs nationwide, as many entities will share in the cost of paying for the war in Iraq.

In the latest news, the president has actually proposed $3.2 billion for the Indian Health Service which represents an increase of $88 million. Senator Tim Johnson labeled the increase as "moderate" and noted that the proposed budget effectively will eliminate the Urban Indian

Hennies predicts House to kill anti-gaming bill

RAPID CITY - In the last Legislative Cracker Barrel of the season, Representative Tom Hennies predicted that the South Dakota House of Representatives would kill HB 167 that would require the Governor to set public hearings in areas affected by gambling compacts with tribes.

The bill proposes that the Legislature approve any compact that increases gambling activities by a tribe or changes the location of the gambling activities.

Hennies stated, "The Legislature should not be dealing with treaties and

Casino construction pushes forward as thunder and lightening passes overhead

PINE RIDGE - "Today, workers should be putting up the walls of the conference rooms of the hotel and that should allow them to frame up the second floor of the hotel," said Walt Big Crow, council representative from Wakpamni District, from his hotel room in Sioux Falls in the middle of a two day meeting with Peska Construction, "the first floor of the hotel is about done and the steel frame is up for the casino and the back side of the house to be used for the administration and general manager has the concrete poured and is ready for framing, things are moving ahead."

Big Crow admitted they were behind and even with the mild weather, they haven't been able to make up for lost time. The $20 million project, funded with a loan from the Shakopee Mdewankanton Dakota Community, has worked through a number of problems, disagreements and trouble areas.

"Until we have a permanent project manager in place both Walt and Paul Little, council representative from Oglala/Whiteclay, will continue to monitor the large construction project for the economic and business development committee and the tribal council," said Lyle Jack, committee chair and council representative from Pine ridge Village, "Lenart Brown Eyes and the committee have agreed on his contract as a temporary project manager and we are waiting for executive board approval and the bid for a permanent project manager should be out this week."

Everyone, the tribe, Shakopee and community members agree that there is a need to monitor the construction of the huge project. Originally, Tim Bowman was hired to be the construc-

Health program which represents a cut of $33 million. Bush said essentially that urban Indians could see assistance elsewhere.

The proposed cuts in the Bureau of Indian Affairs funding total $65 million with total funding requested by Bush at $2.3 billion. Construction projects under Indian education were cut $117 million from the current $307 million. The president made a commitment in 2002 to spend a billion to repair and replace such schools and the OMB report says that target has been met.

According to Sen. Johnson of the Senate Budget and Appropriations Committee other cuts in Indian education and housing are being targeted.

The White House Office of Management and Budget announced a total of 147 programs targeted for cuts.

The BIA's Johnson O'Malley program is slated for a cut of $16 million. JOM funds allow public schools to provide tutoring and counseling to Indian children. OMB says that close to 500,000 Indian children attend public school, while some 40,000 attend BIA schools.

The proposed budget also looks to make cuts in the Department of Housing and Development's Community Development Block Grant program of $738 million. The program provides assistance to tribes and states and other local governments.

There are many other programs which impact Native people and it appears that most of the departments at the federal government level are not immune the proposed cuts. Programs such as Even Start, the GEARUP program, Safe and Drug Free Schools, and the Javis Gifted and Talented education will all suffer cuts. In the Environmental Protection Agency a grant to Alaskan Native villages will be cut $19 million. The Upward Bound program is targeted to be cut $311 million. Even Homeland Security and the Postal Service will take their share of reductions.

The Agriculture department will suffer a proposed cut of $511 million, as well as the Corporation of Public Broadcasting and the National Archives. The Commodity Supplemental Food program will be cut $107 million. It is a program that funds food packages to women, infant, children and the elderly in 32 states and several Indian tribes.

Locally, on the Rosebud Sioux reservation Head Start officials from Washington, DC are working to train the RST tribal council to fulfill its legal obligation of overseeing the fiscal and administrative functioning of Head Start. President Bush is apparently looking at a one percent reduction in Head Start funding and will use evaluative reports to make a decision about the cutbacks.

Also, there is good news for the Sioux Indian Museum of Rapid City and the Plains Indian Museum of Browning, MT. The federal government increased funds for the Indian Arts and Crafts Board which provides oversight for both museums. The increase from $1.14 million in 2006 to $1.16 million in fiscal year 2007 will mean that the prized collections of beadwork, shields, and other artifacts will be available for public viewing. The Sioux Indian Museum is located in the Journey Museum and saw more than 30,000 visitors last year.

tion manager representing the Oglala Sioux Tribe. The council ended up rejecting the Bowman contract and selected Rick Shangreaux, the casino director of facilities to the job on a temporary basis. The question of insurance or bonding was not solved and the council took up the issue again and voted to hire Jess Claussen as the temporary construction manager voting Claussen in over both Brown Eyes and Joe Locust. After a discussion over the terms of a contract, mileage and bonding, the council voted 6-5 to hire Brown Eyes.

A delegation of tribal representatives traveled to Shakopee late last week to get an update on the loan package, to get additional information on Shakopee's expectations, to understand any potential problem areas before they arise and to continue to develop the network between the Oglala Sioux Tribe and the SMDC. The delegation included: Juanita Scherich, council representative from Medicine Root and chair of the finance committee, Kathy Janis, council representative from Wounded Knee District and chair of the health and human services committee, Philip Good Crow, council rep from Porcupine, Valerie Janis, council rep from Oglala, Garfield Steele, council rep from Wounded knee District, Will Peters, council representative from Pine Ridge Village and chair of the education committee and Cora Whiting representing OST president, Cecelia Fire Thunder.

"Paul and I are meeting with Peska to go over the design of the casino floor and the design of the hotel rooms," said Big Crow, "I am determined that when someone drives up to our new casino they will know that it is a tribal casino, that it has an Indian flair - it really is in the details and that is what Paul and I have been working on; when a hotel guest opens his room and turns on a light, the lampshade will have a Lakota or native theme, it is in the details."

Although 95 percent of the workers are tribal members or native, there is still concern that when more framers or electricians or plumbers are needed, Tribal Employment Rights Office says they will find them but at some point to try and stay close to schedule, Big Crow wants to tell Peska to bring more of their regular crew to the site when they are in a bind.

"We had a sense that finding enough available native tradesmen might be an issue," added Big Crow, "and that is why we suggested a training program to parallel the construction and offer an opportunity to our tribal members to be trained and certified as they worked on the casino construction but the council voted not to go down that road."

There has been a good deal of discussion about potential change order that will up the cost of the project beyond the amount of money in the Shakopee loan package and potentially derail the overall project.

"Being a design build, we included a five percent set aside from the total package to cover any problem areas or changes that came up," said Big Crow, "we put $1 million aside for this area and we probably have about $90,000.00 in changes up to this point."

Another $1.5 million has been put aside for the purchase of 250 new machines for the opening of the completed casino.

"We are expecting to be able to install 250 new machines into the new casino based on the successful negotiations between the state and the Oglala Sioux Tribe," said Big Crow, "we have a team that has been working with the other South Dakota tribes on negotiating a new compact that includes additional machines, longer compacts and multiple sites."

When completed, the new Prairie Wind Casino will feature 40,000 square feet of floor, a hotel and restaurant complex with 73 rooms, conference facilities and a pool and fitness center and the old casino will be renovated into an entertainment center. The completed project will allow the casino to hire an additional 100-125 new employees.

"We may not hit our planned completion date of the first week of August in 2006," concluded Big Crow, "and may not open until Labor Day or the middle of September but we are working very hard to make sure that the project stays on budget and we are firmly committed to making that happen."

ized to make these compacts, and that's how it ought to stay."

Senator Bill Napoli (Rep-Rapid City) challenged Hennies' views. He stated, "The Legislative involvement could actually help the tribes. In the past, we have had anti-Indian governors. Who's to say we won't have one again in the future? Thus, lawmakers might actually help the tribes in negotiations if the state has an anti-Indian governor. This is a very positive piece of legislation," Napoli maintained.

Hennies retorted, "This same issue was pushed by the Senate last year, and we killed it in the House. I anticipate we will kill it in the House again this year."

Exceptions for rape and incest

Hennies, an independent mainstream Republican, has challenged his party on their abortion bill. He said, "The legislators made a mistake when they rejected attempts to amend HB 1215 so that prohibitions against abortions would not apply to victims of rape and incest." Hennies stated, "I am opposed to abortion as a means of birth control. I am opposed to partial-birth abortion. However, I don't think the Legislature should tell a 12-year-old victim of rape and incest what she and her family can do. Who are we to say you have to carry that child to birth?" Hennies remarked, "This needs to be left to the child, her family and their doctor."

Universities' right to free Speech

Right wing leaders in the Republican Party have pushed HB 1222, which would require the state's universities to follow a set of guidelines to assure "intellectual diversity on the campuses." The legislation proposes to "prohibit political bias in student-funded organizations, protect individuals against political viewpoint discrimination and encourage a balanced variety of campus-wide panels and speakers." There have been no complaints received from anyone about any inappropriate discussions at South Dakota's universities. "You guys are trying to fix a problem that doesn't even exist. Furthermore, it is likely to be unenforceable. Will universities have to make sure they have equal balance of Democrats and Republicans? Will they have to have equal balance of Indian and non-Indian speakers? I agree with Senator Napoli, this truly is a dumb bill," concluded Hennies.

Hennies retirement and candidacy for Rapid City Council

As the Cracker Barrel session started, Hennies announced that he would not be running for legislative office in 2006. He has served for eight years in the House and is term-limited, and he will not run against incumbent Stan Adelstein (Rep-Rapid City). He announced, "I'll be a candidate for the Rapid City Common Council in Ward 2."

Hennies also serves as a member of the Rapid City Planning Commission. He was one of a minority opposing the Wal-Mart 200,000 square-foot Super Center development on the cliff overlooking Reptile Gardens at the entrance to Highway 16, Mt. Rushmore Road.

CRST receives $1 million poverty grant

Lummi Nation in western Washington received an initial grant of $1 million with the potential to receive as much as $5 million more.

The foundation was established in 1934 by heirs of the founder of the Great Northern Railway, James J. Hill. Its philanthropy is focused on eight states that were served by the railway: Minnesota, South Dakota, North Dakota, Iowa, Montana, Washington, Idaho and Oregon.

Its goal is to help reduce poverty in communities by developing the work force and promoting income-generating opportunities, foundation officials say.

The Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe wants to create internships to foster youth leadership and encourage individual savings, tribal members said.

The tribes have been in partnership with the foundation for the past three years.

``Everything begins right at home,'' said Harold Frazier, chairman of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe. ``The plan we submitted is built that way, where we start from the roots up.''

The proposals of the three tribes emerged from the 76 tribes within the eight-state region, Stauber said.

Back to back bomb threats at Todd County Middle School

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

MISSION - This past week Todd County Middle School saw two back-to-back evacuations of all students because of bomb threats.

Since last Tuesday, there have been four bomb threats at the middle school. On Tuesday a note was written in one of the bathrooms andstudents were evacuated from the building.

All students and staff boarded buses and waited until the all clear signal was given. On Wednesday another threat was written in a bathroom and students the followed the same procedure. No students remained in the building, nor was the threat ignored, according to TCMS principal Peggy Diekhoff.

The bomb threats are being taken seriously and those students who committed the false acts have been dealt with by the School Board following the discipline policy.

Great measures have been taken by the staff at the middle school to closely supervise the bathroom areas. Students and staff alike are upset over the false threatsbecause they disrupt learning across the school. The Todd County School Board is also upset at the threats.

Rosebud Law Enforcement Services, Chief Charles Red Crow was questioned about the recent rash of bomb threats and the procedure of the emergency response.

He said, "Anytime someone at TCMS or anywhere else finds something in writing, they note the time and date and contact us. Our patrol officers respond as well our criminal investigators.

The emergency medical services respond as well as the Mission Volunteer Fire Department. Yesterday's threat came in over a cell phone. So far, there have been two notes and two called in by cell phone."

Diekhoff said, "It is unfortunate that issues like the bomb threat have to cloud the public's view of the TCMS. There are many outstanding students here who come to school everyday and work their hardest to be successful.

The same is true for the staff. We are all trying to work together to eliminate this problem and we appreciate the support and assistance we have from Dr. Bordeaux and the School Board."

Red Crow noted that when someone calls in there exists a record of the call with Golden West telephone company. He said, "The numbers are there, but the process to access them is difficult. We are working with Pierre. Such threats are a federal offense under the Safe Schools Act and the Patriot Act. They also represent a terrorist threat under the Homeland Security Act."

Students have been evacuated from the middle school on four occasions; twice to the high school last semester and two times to the buses this semester. In addition to the roof incident when the school did not have to evacuate, there have also been two threats during which students were caught in the act. An evacuation did not have to occur because the students stated both were false threats.

Red Crow confirmed the fact that past threats that were found were connected to certain students and the offense was addressed appropriately by the school and law enforcement.

Chief Red Crow noted that there was a public service announcement issued by the police department informing the public of the seriousness of such bomb threats and this will hopefully address future bomb threats.

Red Cloud qualifies five for 3B, Bulldawg a question mark in 3A

PINE RIDGE - Dave "Bulldawg" Michaud, a junior at Pine Ridge, hurt his neck in a wrestling match in December and has wrestled in pain for the entire season compiling a 30-1 record and a number two ranking in the Class A 171 pound division. After sitting out the Dakota conference meet and visiting two doctors, x-rays and a MRI have determined that Michaud is suffering from a bulging disc and a slight crack in a vertebrae.

"He is doing therapy now but the pain is still there," said Dave Michaud, Bulldawg's father and wrestling coach at Pine Ridge high school, "he is going to try and wrestle through the pain but making weight might be a little more of a challenge since he hasn't been able to work out very hard over the last two weeks."

Michaud wrestled at 160 last year as a sophomore and lost in the championship match at the state tournament. After a successful football season, the Pine Ridge junior was looking to an even better year of wrestling.

In addition to Michaud at 171 set to compete in the Region 3A tourney on Saturday in Hot Springs, Pine Ridge has James Pine, a seventh grader, at 103 (14-17), Bruce Jacobs, an eighth grader at 112 (25-16),. Kelley Pulliam, a senior at 135 (25-9), Phil Davis, a senior at 189 (16-12) and Charles Janis, a senior at heavyweight, 275 (19-14).

The top four in each weight class qualify for the State A scheduled for February 24 and 25 in Watertown. Teams participating in Region 3A include: Todd County, Cheyenne Eagle Butte-Faith, Mitchell, Hot Springs, Pierre, Huron, Little Wound, Winner and Pine Ridge.

Red Cloud qualified five wrestlers for the Region 4B tourney at Stanley County high school in Ft. Pierre on Saturday. Tanner O'Daniel took third in 103, Zack Janis was fourth at 135, Catlin Clifford was fourth at 140, Darrin Merrival took third at 189 and Andrew Twiss took fourth at 215. The top four wrestlers in each division at the Region 3B tourney will qualify for the State B tourney in Aberdeen at the Barnet Center on Feb, 24 and 25.

Big Crow helps Williston State to second straight 20 win season

WILLISTON, ND - With a 75-28 win over United Tribes on Saturday, the Lady Tetons notched their twentieth win for the second straight year as Pine Ridge's Laura Big Crow hit for 10 points and a game high nine rebounds.

Opening with a 14-0 run and holding a 38-6 halftime lead, Williston had a chance to play everyone on the bench as Red Cloud's Tate Locust hit for a season high ten points.

With just four games left on their schedule, the Lady Tetons, now 20-5 travel to Miles Community College on Wednesday and to Lake Region on Sunday before closing out the season with home games against Dawson Community College and Bismarck State.

On February 8, Big Crow led the Lady Tetons to a 70-61 win over Minot State University-Bottineau with 27 points and 13 rebounds going nine for nine from the free throw line. It was their fourth win in a row.

Williston had opened February with a 69-47 drubbing of North Dakota State College of Science. Big Crow helped with 16 points and seven rebounds. It was about the same story as Williston State knocked off Dawson Community College at the end of January with Big Crow hitting seven for eight from the field and eight for eight from the line for 22 points to go with five rebounds.

What we have here is a 'Failure to communicate'

Communication between institutions and their constituents or coworkers is highly desirable as it breaks down barriers to misunderstanding.

One man might cleverly call it corruption while another will call it advocating for or advancing a cause. Whatever the catch phrase of the day or 'phrase du jour' as the French might say, in Lakota it might be called owakahniga which translates to 'I understand.'

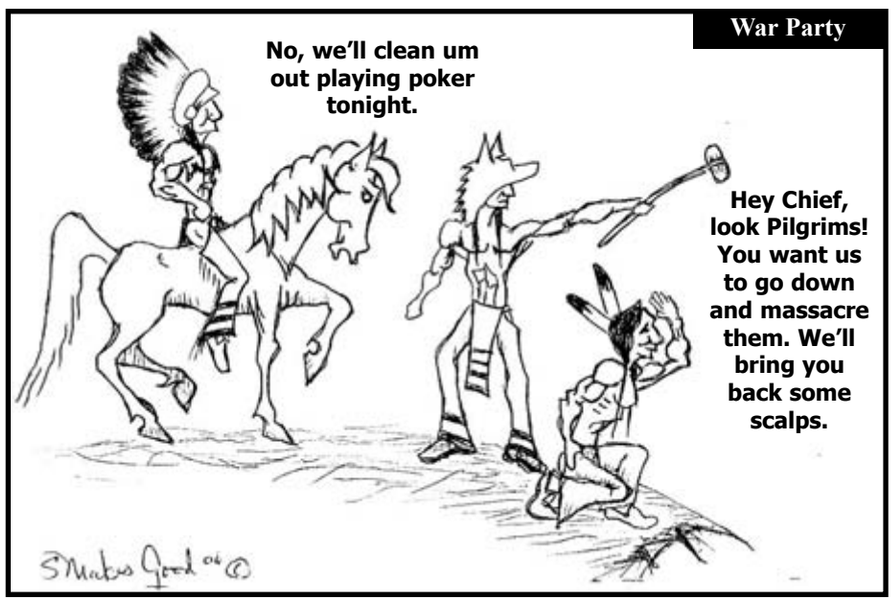
Understanding the issues which confront us personally, our community, or workplace is a responsibility that we all share in.

It points out that every person in Lakota in life is important as they also desire to know what is going on.

When we speak of casino profits or indirect costs, etc. each of us wants to know what that means. The only way that can become a reality is we either keep people informed on a daily basis about the intimate details of our business or what is occurring at the higher levels and its effect on the tribal membership.

If an institution wishes to keep its membership informed then it has to occasionally embark on a media campaign to get the word out and tell all. Sometimes that may mean disclosing the profitablity of some enterprise or simply explaining who works where and what their responsibility is to the public.

Nothing is more important to the listening audience, or our clientele, or our readership then representing to them the ideas, changes and initiatives that we are grappling with as a community.



Such sharing shows the community that their involvement and support is appreciated and acknowledged. If time is money, as in the white world, then information and understanding in the Lakota world simply means sharing a general snapshot of what life is like in those institutions that have our welfare mind.

Communication is the key to success, that is an age old saying but is true no matter where it may be in government, tribal, private sector or in family. Communicating with constituents does not always come easily. Communicating with the people that voted you into office is even harder.

Accountability is not a one way street and our elected officials are held up to higher standards, whether they like it or not, they are role models. Politicians ask you for your vote, your trust, your belief in their ability to lead.

Yet for some reason they can't trust the Oyate with vital information regarding the members of this nation.

Accountability and communication can not be achieved without dialogue.

Things to empower yourself

Economic development with tribal versus private sector

After being in business on the Pine Ridge Reservation for the past 17 years, I have some strong feelings on the private business vs. government owned business.

Tribal governments have the opportunity to impose taxes on products and services on reservations and are immune from state taxes. They also enjoy other advantages in business, like the ability to practice sovereignty in gaming. I applaud the tribes that have capitalized on these two very important economic opportunities.

By Patty Pourier

I also have seen tribes like the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, our neighbors to the north, successfully run utilities on their reservations. The telephone company has been operated by the CRST successfully and has contributed to the services and economy of their members.

Through the years, I have also observed the tribe trying to run other types of business on reservations and fail miserably. Throughout history, governments have been notorious as poor business entities, whether it is the federal government or our tribal governments.

In exploring the reasons why governments are not very successful business entities, I have discovered several things.

One, the tribe wants to manage the business through the tribal council. This throws the business into the political arena, which rarely works. Politics and business are like oil and water - they do not mix. Trying to manage a business on a daily business by a committee rather than a competent manager calling the shots, is not effective nor efficient. Not to mention, the pressure of unending nepotism (hiring of relatives) that is used with unemployment figures in the double digits.

Two, the tribe usually wants to use the profits for other tribal needs, i.e. general fund, per capita payments. Here is a big difference. In the last 17 years, my husband and I have worked for a corporation drawing a salary that is determined by our productivity. The salary is reasonable and competitive with industry standards for personal that are not owners, but employees of corporations in the same type business. It has made no difference in our salaries, that my husband happens to own 100 percent of the company. All of the profits have been invested back into the company for future growth, repairs and upkeep etc.

Three, the tribes will try to use the business as a training experience for unemployment problems that plague many reservations. It is near impossible to run a profitable, competitive business and use it as a training project as well. In order to be competitive in pricing and turn a profit in the private sector, a competent and trained workforce is required. Trying to train a workforce on the job is expensive and many times does not provide professional services required.

Four, personal investment in the business is lacking in a government owned business. No matter how dedicated an individual is to a tribally owned business, the level of commitment to success cannot be the same as if the person running things had to personally guarantee the business, and put up everything they have from their car to their home.

Five, experience and consistency in business through out our government is lacking. Politicians are just that - politicians - not CEO's of companies. We have a new set of politicians every two years at Pine Ridge. In order to be a good manager, it usually takes at least 12 to 18 months to bring a manager up to speed and be productive enough to be profitable.

Six, lack of trust, rightfully so, is an issue for tribes in business. This is based on past experience. There is certainly no blame associated with the lack of trust our politicians have for one another and their constituents have for them. Trust is a quality that is earned by past performance in similar situations. Let's face it; the track record for rip offs and mispending is historical.

So, why don't the tribes stick to taxation, gaming and utilities? The risk of failure for taxation and gaming is minimal because of the advantages enjoyed by sovereignty. One of the reasons that has been mentioned to me is because the politicians, wanted to be in business themselves as private individuals, but for some reason were not able to. They then bring this entrepreneurial attitude to their positions in office. It doesn't work.

The Pine Ridge Area Chamber of Commerce is a non-profit organization that is a strong proponent of privately owned business. I applaud their efforts to lend support to the individual entrepreneur.

Where are the leaders we can look at as role models

Dear Editor:

Thank-you for printing my previous article, I appreciate it. I would now like to respond to Mr. Tim Giago's response to said article. As I read Mr. Giago's response I was somewhat taken back, not by the contents of the response, but of the sudden revelation of the passing of time.

Wow! It's hard to believe that Mr. Giago is now in his seventy-first season of life. I am happy that at his age, his mind is very sharp. I all of a sudden felt like a rotten guy for challenging him. I realize now that standing up to something as serious as corruption in tribal government is a younger man's lot in this life.

I feel compelled to apologize to Mr. Giago, especially if he felt my challenge was meant to intimidate him. Nothing could be further than the truth and I do apologize sir. My challenge was actually a cry for help, as I know that I am now in the belly of the beast, and I see how this beast is prohibiting us from making social, economic, and political progress as Lakota people. The rest of this article is not directed at Mr. Giago, but merely some thoughts I would like to share with the people.

True, I do not have the distinction of being at many council sessions, I actually feel fortunate that I do not have that distinction for it certainly isn't something to be proud of. How can you be at so many of these functions throughout the years and not feel morally compelled to make a stand that would have a direct bearing on bringing productive change?

As a former high school teacher, I remember all to well the day I was challenged by my students with a simple question, "What are you guys doing about it?" I believe the question was directed at people my age and older.

On that day, In Lakota Culture class, we were talking about the issues that negatively affect our Lakota Oyate. The list of issues was verbally compiled by the students as I transcribed them on the board. The students amazed me as I realized they had a complete understanding of where they lived, and what affected them.

It goes without saying that the list compiled by the students was quite extensive and covered every aspect one might expect in relation to living in a high poverty area. Each issue was discussed by the students at length, ultimately, the discussion turned to tribal politics. Eventually the discussion got down to the meat of it all, the question took on a life of their own.

"Who is watching out for the young people?" "How come tribal politicians always talk about the youth and then ignore them?" "Why can't anything be done about tribal politicians who hurt their own People?"

"Where are the leaders we can look at as role models so we can know how to be leaders?" Then all youthful eyes were upon me, although they were respectful eyes, they nonetheless possessed the courage to ask the most valid question, "What are you guys doing about it?"

I knew my students, and I loved them. They knew me and what I carried in my heart. Although they did not excuse me, I knew they had every right in the world to do so. In front of those youthful eyes I asked them what they wanted me to do. They gave me many answers and one of them resulted in me sitting on tribal council now.

Everyday now I vividly remember that day of being in front of youthful eyes. When I hear people seemingly brag about how long they have participated in tribal council or tribal politics, I merely paraphrase the question from my students by asking "What have you done?" The simple answer to me is, if we can't see it, touch it, or feel it, then you have done nothing. It is time to make room for Lakota People who have true love and compassion for their People to sit in those positions of responsibly and servitude.

As I sit in the belly of the beast, I see the biggest, most infected sore becoming worse with each passing year of negligence. This sore doesn't even have a scab, it is an open decaying pile of rotting flesh. That sore is called CORRUPTION! Even the tiniest of Lakota, the babies, will suffer from this rotting sore.

So now it is up to the People. Where do you stand? How much will you contribute to stopping this infection? I, along with others are making our stand, but we need help. The question is simple, do you condone corruption?

Yes or no?

I cannot, and will not explain the actions of full grown adults to the youthful watchful eyes. I can only account for myself and tell them that I am doing my best.

I am doing my best and that I will not back down. I have been trained to be a warrior, not a back stabbing punk. Mitakuyepi, how will you answer when the young Lakota ask, "What are you guys doing about it?"

It takes a loving Lakota couple to make a difference in a life

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

I was beside myself today as I opened an email from the Alumni Of Color conference organizers at Harvard University and read that they would be recognizing my achievements and accomplishments in the education field. It is a great honor for me as I look over the years that have gone all too quickly by. Such awards are not the kind of thing that will make or break a career, but taken together they represent a composite picture of one.

In Lakota country, the idea of honor and respect is very much a part of our vocabulary. We call such honor uonihan and in traditional culture it is practiced in a good way.

Over the weekend, we went to an honoring at the Mother Butler center in Rapid City where Isaac and Zona White Face were honored for 62 years of marriage. It was so good for the community to see a positive example of longetivity and a loving relationship. The couple was actually very eager to talk about their courtship and marriage and that was fun to a part of.

Again, honor and respect are a permanent fixture of Lakota life and when it is done in a good way it creates tradition. People want to be a part of something that is positive and desirable and too often we do not honor our loved ones when they are alive.

We do not see enough couples investing time and commitment to each other in order to serve as a strong foundation for a lasting family unit. A lot of the issues that young people and young families face today are because of a breakdown in such a vital unit. It make take a whole village to raise a child as it is fashionable to say, but it simply takes a loving Lakota couple to make the difference in the life of a beautiful Lakota child.

I recently applied for a grant job that is supposed to help smokers quit smoking. I didn't qualify even though I live in a place that has 85 percent unemployment. I was wondering if it was because I have never been a smoker myself. I guess I will never know. That's the thing about being over qualified in a community where jobs virtually are non-existent. I think if I were a young man and had to do life over again, I would never have come back to the rez. Even outside wasicu research grant projects who use us to justify their numbers want to discriminate us. As a Vietnam Veteran, I experience the rhetoric of empty promises all the time as people find ways to filter us out. This outsider to Rosebud told me they were looking for a 'better fit' for their non-smoking project. They should at least have told me.

Makes me wonder what other Vietnam Veterans experience in terms their prospective employment opportunities. As I said, honor and respect is something that is sometimes difficult to come by if an organization or individual is caught up in chasing the almighty dollar. Often times, keeping up with the Joneses tends to blur our cultural values. Values in Lakota life are not easy to understand or live by, especially if one is looking in from the outside. We often have scholars and outsiders who will shout out the importance of values, but have no first hand knowledge of what it means to honor and respect those who have earned such distinction.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (nagik sapa) Sicangu Lakota, is a decorated Vietnam Veteran with a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and resides on the Rosebud.

Enjoyed the column on the ugliest car on the reservation

Dear Editor:

My name is Steve Marshall, from Sparta Wi (west-central Wisconsin).

I enjoyed reading Tim Giago's article on the Ugliest Car On The Reservation. I attend the Sturgis Rally about every year and have several friends in eastern South Dakota, and travel there several times a year.

I have been to Wounded Knee several times to pay my respects, and I seem to have some sort of connection or fascination towards the historical and spiritual aspects of the area. I've been to the Standing Rock and Cheyenne River Reservations and to both of Sitting Bulls Grave sites, and when I'm on the Pine Ridge or Rosebud Reservations I try to get KILI 90.1 on FM Radio. In 1973-74 I worked for IT&T Telephone Co and was in Montana when the Wounded Knee standoff was going on, and I figured I'd either be in the way or get killed for being in the wrong place at the wrong time, so I stayed there until it was time to go to Wolf Point rez to do telephone work, then headed back to Wisconsin.

Anyway, on one of my Sturgis trips I took Hwy 34 west from Madison to Fort Thompson on the Crow Creek Reservation.

A few years earlier I had a 1978 Ford LTD Country Squire Wagon that ran great, but was a gas hog, and I wanted to take a saws-all and cut the roof off and make a convertable pickup out of it, but didn't, as my cousin wanted it to pull his camper and haul his six kids, so I gave it to him.

Anyway, there on the rez I saw three native kids had done just that to a wagon just like mine! and were hauling hay to their ponies, fine looking ponies ..., red bandannas and cowboy hats and the dust just flying!

The back seats fold down flat so hauling hay would be easy and they were having a good time..., stereo blasting..., a rez-rod with a purpose. It did my heart and soul good. Keep up the good work.

Notes From Indian Country

Indians didn't pay taxes 100 years ago

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Periodically there is a repeat column I am forced to write. It usually takes an ignorant and insensitive remark by a non-Indian to prompt me to return to the scene of the crime.

One of my advertising sales people for Indian Education Today magazine was seeking a timely ad to take advantage of the "It's time-to-pay-taxes" portion of the year.

She approached one so-called tax preparation office located in Rapid City, SD and ran into this crass remark, "Why should we advertise; Indians don't pay taxes."

Ouch! When will this ignorance come to an end?

All right, let's address this horrid misconception. Indians hold jobs. As a matter of fact, many working for the tribal government, Indian Health Service, Bureau of Indian Affairs or other governmental agencies receive salaries ranging from $24,000 to $100,000 annually. Professional teachers and administrators working at the many Indian schools on the reservations are also in the middle class pay income bracket. These salaried employees pay all of the taxes every American citizen pays from withholding to Medicare.

Every time an Indian buys groceries taxes are included.

When we purchase an automobile or a costly appliance, taxes are included. When we fill the car up with gasoline we pay taxes.

What so many non-Indian citizens do not realize is that all of the sales taxes collected in the towns bordering the Indian reservations never go to the Indian reservations.

They go to the state and the community where the purchase was made.

There are no free rides for Indians when it comes to attending college.

Most apply for Pell Grants or for other grants available to students of all colors. Others use the GI Bill, as I did, or get jobs and work their way through college. There are some funds available through tribal funds or through the BIA, but they are far and few.

Those lucky enough to belong to a tribe with a rich casino can get scholarship grants that are set aside for the higher education of tribal members.

But keep in mind that only 5 percent of the Indian nations earn 90 percent of the casino profits. That doesn't leave much for some of the larger tribes such as those of the Great Sioux Nation or the Navajo Nation.

And some non-Indians may find this hard to believe but Indians do not get a monthly check from the BIA or from any other branch of the government.

If we own land on the reservation and that land is leased to a rancher or farmer, we do receive an annual lease check for the use of our land. This method of payment for leasing land or renting a house is common throughout America for non-Indians as well.

The BIA usually distributes these not-so-large-checks. Nearly every merchant worth their salt knows when these checks are distributed and plan their sales accordingly.

Now, let's talk about all of that wonderful, free health care. If an Indian works for an organization or federal agency that provides health insurance, that insurance company is billed whenever that employee uses the services of the Indian Health Service Hospital. The same holds true if the Indian man or woman is on Medicare.

Some tribes use the profits from their casinos to build healthcare facilities on their reservations. They also use their casino profits to purchase health insurance policies for their tribal members. That insurance helps to cover treatment at the tribal health care facilities.

The I.H.S. has hospitals on some Indian reservations, not all. Reservation residents do use these facilities. However, it is written into the treaty agreements between the Indian nations and the United States government that health care will be provided in exchange for the millions of acres of land ceded in the treaty agreements.

The services provided by the I.H.S. are not considered to be the best. The large and sparsely populated reservations have a hard time hiring doctors with any lengthy experience.

Most of the doctors assigned to the Indian hospitals are first or second year doctors paying off a government loan for their education. They are learning while on the job and from the complaints I hear from so many of their patients, their inexperience does have its unfavorable consequences.

If Indians had all of the benefits attributed to us by the non-Indian world we would be the most intelligent, wealthiest and most protected people in America. Indians would be debt free, trouble free, illness free, tax free and positively carefree.

But we (Indians) know that is not the case. It is only the majority of non-Indians who still continue to believe these myths, misconceptions and outright fallacies.

So please believe me when I say that Indians do not get a monthly check from the government, many of us do pay for our health care, we do not get a free college education and, to bury the biggest misconception of all, we do pay taxes.

April the 15th looms as large for us as it does for the rest of America.

Lakota grandmother urges people to consider being a foster parent

Dear Editor:

I am writing this letter on behalf of my grandson's and what they have been through. I had moved out of state because my job required me to.

When I had come home for a visit in Rapid City, then I found out my grandson's were placed in Department of Social Service foster care. Their mother had some legal problems and was unable to care for them. Their father (my son who is deceased) and their grandfather (mother's father) was physically unable to care for them.

I moved home and started legal proceedings to try to get custody and placement of my grandson's back with me. It was then I found out my name was in the National Registry for child abuse and neglect. I then contacted Department of Social Services, Pierre office and found out it was a misunderstanding back in 1988 when my younger daughter died of cancer and my name was cleared.

I then continued my legal proceedings to get my grandson's placed back in my home. After much frustration and feeling like I was running into a brick a wall and unable to financially obtain legal help.

I moved back home to Martin. My sister told me about O.N.T.R.A.C. and they will be able to help you. I then contacted O.N.T.R.A.C. and explained my situation to them and what I had done so far legally. I then proceeded to do everything required of me.

At the same time, DSS wanted me to place my grandson's and their half-brother in the same placement home together. I agreed to take all three of them because this is our Lakota traditions, culture and family values. Finally a court date was set in Rapid City court, to see if my grandson's care could be transferred back to Ogalala Sioux Tribe court. DSS then notified me and told that my grandson's half-brother's foster parents wanted to adopt him, since he had been with them since he was a baby and it would hurt him psychologically to have him removed from their home and placed in another home environment. When you are faced with a problem like this, it is heartbreaking. Your first reaction is to try to keep the boys together as a family.

I remembered what my mother always taught us, her children. That all children are "God's special little people" and it is up to us to take care of them and do what is right for them and their well-being. Now, the foster parents adopted him and my grandson's go with their grandpa to visit with him.

We went to Rapid City court and the judge transferred my grandson's case back to Ogalala Sioux Tribe court. I was so overwhelmed, I just wept from happiness. I thanked DSS and O.N.T.R.A.C. for working with me to have my grandson's returned to me.

Next, DSS contacted me and told me my (deceased) husband's nephew's son was in foster care next. I contacted O.N.T.R.A.C. and went through the same proceedings next. My grandson's was placed back with me.

When my two older grandson's half-sister was placed in foster care. I contacted DSS in Rapid City to see what I had to do. I also had O.N.T.R.A.C. contact them to. O.N.T.R.A.C. was told that the mother didn't want them involved in this case. DSS said to take PRIDE classes and to become a foster parent for the state. I completed everything and received my DSS foster care license. Then I was told that the foster parents for my grandson's half-sister wanted to adopt her. I talked to my grandson's and told it would hurt their sister psychologically to remove her from foster parents. I said, we all have to work together as a team, DSS, O.N.T.R.A.C., court systems and us to do what is best for your sister. The foster parents have adopted her since then.

I know it was hard to make decisions like these, but we must work together DSS, O.N.T.R.A.C., court systems and everyone involved to do what is best for the children. And not what we want done. I know because I have been through it all.

I am now a foster parent for DSS and O.N.T.R.A.C., where I have children coming into my home of all ages. I welcome them and offer them a safe home to live in. I work with them because it is not their fault they are in these situations.

We must remember the Sacred Circle of life which is our children for future generations to come. I have taken children from DSS and O.N.T.R.A.C and taken care of them until they are reunited with parents or relatives placements. I know there are times when O.N.T.R.A.C is unable to get cases transferred back to Ogalala Sioux Tribe courts. We must all realize and work as a team with DSS and O.N.T.R.A.C., court systems to do what is best for the children.

My daughter's always say my door is cut in half invisibly. The top half you have to knock to come in and the bottom half is open all the time for the children to come in and be welcomed. If I could give back help to DSS and O.N.T.R.A.C for helping me getting my grandson's back by being a foster parent for them. I do this willing and from the bottom of my heart whole heartly.

By writing this letter, I sincerely hope that other Indian families will open up their hearts and homes to become foster parents for DSS and O.N.T.R.A.C.

We say our children are sacred then let us open our hearts and homes to all these children in need and become foster parents. Let us keep our Sacred Circle of Life going. Let us uphold our Lakota tradition, culture and family values the elders have taught us.

My mother (Rebecca Apple-deceased) always taught us it is the darkest before dawn but never give up your hope and prayers. Everything will work out in its own way and for the best.

Even though she is gone now, her teachings live on through us her children, this is what we call Lakota tradition, culture and family values.

CONTRACT HEALTH SERVICES

Important Facts You Should Know About Contract Health

IHS-CHS Coverage is not automatic. Should you have an emergency situation requiring you to obtain care at a non-IHS facility, you must notify the CHS office at 605-747-3215 OR 605-747-3216 within 72 hours. If you fail to notify the CHS office you will be responsible for any bills you incur.

IHS-CHS Coverage is for Emergent, Life-Threatening situations. Sore Throats, earaches, and medication refills, etc., are not considered emergent or life threatening. IHS-CHS will not cover a visit if an IHS Facility would have been closer. CHS does not cover medicatons.

If you visit a non-IHS facility you MUST sign a release of information to provide this information to the CHS office. The CHS committee cannot make a decision without sufficient medical information. In most cases a referral is limited to one medical treatment and/or appointment.

CHS Eligibility Criteria: You MUST be an enrolled member of a federally recognized tribe. You MUST reside within the Contract Health Service Delivery Area (CHSDA) which covers the counties surrounding the Rosebud Sioux Tribe Reservation. If you are a non-member of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe you MUST reside within the reservation boundaries.

Eligible Veterans: A patient will apply and utilize alternate resources if the individual is eligible. This is pursuant to IHS Regulation, 42 CFR, Part C. Purpose: To ensure patients receive the resources they are qualified for/or entitled to. To inquire about eligibility or to apply for benefits, contact the local Veterans Health Administration Center in Hot Springs at 1-800-764-5370 or the Rosebud Veterans Center at 605-747-2593.

IHS-CHS Approval: Please do not request preauthorization from the Indian Health Service. The CHS Committee must review all referrals and call-in requests. The CHS Committee approves or disapproves the referrals based on medical facts presented and the CHS criteria being met. The committee is the only authority to approve or disapprove.

IHS-CHS Payor of Last Resort: The Patient MUST apply for any alternate resources for which they may be eligible. A denial from the alternate resource is required for reconsideration by the CHS Committee. You may contact the Patient Benefits Coordinator to assist in the application process for alternate resources. Please call (605)747-3213 for further information. CHS Guidelines require all patients under the age of 18 and all pregnant patients apply for Medicaid.

Non-Compliance With the Approval Process May Serve as the Basis for Denial of Payment by Contract Health Services:

Payment Process: When a patient has Medicare, Medicaid, CHAMPUS, Private Insurance, Workmen's Compensation or is covered by another resource, that resource is considered the primary carrier. All Explanations of Benefits (EOBs) from the primary carrier(s) must be brought or mailed to the CHS office without delay when received by the patient. Many times the Non-IHS provider will turn the patient's bill over to a collection agency because the provider is unable to obtain an EOB from the patient. It is Very Important that you provide this to the provider of the CHS office in order to complete the payment process.

Thursday:
2:00 - 5:00 PM and 6:00 - 9:00 PM

There are many medical conditions in which certain over the counter medications could cause harm or untoward side effects if not appropriately used. Therefore, in an effort to ensure the safety of our clients we will no longer be providing over the counter (OTC) medications without seeing a medical provider.

The Pharmacy Program is currently experiencing a high volume of prescriptions and a staffing shortage. We ask for your patience and assistance in meeting the needs of all of our clients when calling in for Pharmacy refills. We ask that you try to call at least 2-4 days in advance for your refills.

Clients/Patients have the option of calling and asking to speak directly to a Pharmacist or you have the option of using our new automated system.

The Automated System allows clients/patients to call and leave their refill requests by calling 747-3268 without having to wait to speak to a Pharmacist. When using the automated system you will need to provide your full name, chart number, medication name, prescription number and number of refills remaining. All of the information can be located on your medication bottles.

URGENT CARE

The Rosebud Comprehensive Health Care Facility provides Urgent Care for non-emergent medical conditions. Patients can present to the Urgent Care on a Walk-In basis seven (7) days a week between the hours of 9:00AM to 9:00 PM.

Urgent Care can be accessed by entering the Emergency Department entrance and the Urgent Care window is located to your left. Upon presenting you will be greeted by a Medical Support Assistant who will ask for your name, date of birth and/or chart number in order to obtain your medical record.

You will be TRIAGED by a Registered Nurse within 15 minutes from the time of your arrival. The Registered Nurse will ask you for your Chief Complaint (What brings you to the ER?) and will obtain vital signs (blood pressure, pulse, temperature, respirations, height, weight and pain scale).

Triage is a process that assists the medical provider in establishing the order in which the patients will receive care/treatment. Just because you signed up first does not necessarily mean that you will be seen first. Patients that present to Urgent Care will be seen in the order of their Medical Priority, which is determined during the Triage Process.

Four Sicangu members inadvertently re-arrested

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Rosebud Law Enforcement Services, Chief of Police Charles Red Crow, responded to questions about four Sicangu tribal members allegedly re-arrested for outstanding warrants which had been previously reconciled or taken care of.

In theory, the four should not have been arrested since their charges or fines had been paid or arrangements made to take care of the charges. Chief Red Crow confirmed the arrest of four individuals and said, "The gist is that we had active warrants on file at the Police Department. It is not the police department's responsibility to pull warrants. If the judge orders a warrant pulled, a clerk of the courts will come to the PD and pull the warrant."

Red Crow exhibited a filing cabinet with over a one-thousand outstanding warrants on the Rosebud. He noted that since there is no Marshall's service, regular patrol officers will serve warrants in the course of their normal duties. He said, "We are not authorized to pull warrants. The only time is if they are being executed or pulled by the courts. There was a breakdown in communication by the courts and the police department. If officers fail to serve warrants they can be held in contempt."

The police department and the court system were connected at one point through a communications system called Creative Information Systems Co or CISCO. He said, "We had connected all three elements, the court, the law enforcement and detention to maintain data. The court broke off of the data system. It was good continuity."

Red Crow restated the issue when he said, "All were taken care of administratively on the court side, however we were not made aware of this."

When asked about any public fallout from this incident, he said, "The fall out has already started. The captain addressed the tribal council. The individuals want a public apology. We are discussing the issue with an attorney. I still think the officers acted within the color of the law. We do not do things selectively as the public dictates the direction of our operation."

Red Crow said the police department is handling the issue as well as could be expected.

In the course of responding to the query about the arrest, Red Crow also offered a brief tour of the law enforcement services 9-1-1 command center which also serves as the department's regular dispatch center. Sergeant Daisy Wright explained that when a citizen calls in to report a violation or infraction that person's name is typed into a data field to see if an active warrant exists on the caller.

Chief Red Crow said that he would like to see an anonymous crime hotline become a reality. Some municipalities have such an anonymous hotline available to the public. A citizen is most likely to continue to share the responsibility of reporting crimes if they know they can do it on an anonymous basis.

Finally, Wright stated that the 9-1-1 dispatch center was outfitted with state of the art equipment and the only thing that they need is a headset which can simultaneously monitor communications "traffic" between officers and the dispatch center.

RST president tells congress not to 'scapegoat' Indian gaming

ROSEBUD - On Feb. 1 and 2, Rosebud Sioux Tribe President Rodney Bordeaux met with U.S. Senators Tim Johnson and John Thune, along with U.S. Representa-tive Stephanie Herseth, and asked them not let congress restrict Indian Gaming nation-wide. Also, President Borideaux asked South Dakota's congressional delegation to not support proposals circulating in Congress that would restrict Tribal Government's ability to participate in the nation-wide political process.

"I asked our Congressional delegation to not allow any restrictions on tribal participation in the political process because of the Jack Abramoff scandal in Washington, DC." President Bordeaux stated that they were very receptive and that they would urge their colleagues to be fair to tribes on the entire issue.

Also, while in Washington, DC President Bordeaux and Rosebud Sioux Tribe Council Representatives Ken La-Deaux, Patsy Valandra, Lewis Good Voice-Eagle, ang Russell Eagle Bear advocated South Dakota's Con-gressional delegation on a whole host of issues. President Bordeaux stated that, "We basically advocated for more funding for IHS so that we can improve the services offered to our people. We also asked them to put the funding back into the BIA school construction fund so that St. Francis Indian School can get built with all of the classrooms and facilities that it was originally meant to get."

President Bordeaux went on to further state, "Council Russell Eagle Bear advocated to our Congressional delegation that our returning veterans from overseas must get the health care that they deserve. Our veterans need access to quality care without having to pay high co-payments in order to get it." While in D.C. the Rosebud delegation also advocated for the BIA to receive the full funding it needs to within its Law Enforcement Services (LES) program. President Bordeaux stated, "We have a real problem with our LES ad Juvenile Detention Facility (JDC) both being funded

The District 14A Boys basketball will have seeded #1 and #2 host games on Tuesday, Feb. 28.. The games will start at 6:30 p.m. The two winners will play in the District Championship game on Saturday, March 4, at Rapid City Stevens high school gym starting at 7 p.m.

The Region 7A boys basketball championship game will be played on Tuesday, March 7, in Pierre or Ft. Pierre, starting at 7 p.m. CST. The boys State A tournament will be held in Sioux Falls on March 16, 17 and 18.

An open letter to the fans of Little Wound School.

To Our Fans:

As we enter district, region and state tournament play it is extremely important keep good sportsmanship our top priority. Our athletes, school and community will be judged by the way we enter the gym, how we show respect to tournament management, how our teams warm-up and compete and finally by how we leave the gym to return home.

I encourage all of us to show respect for our opponents at all times, to the game officials, for the American flag during the playing of the Anthems in memory of those young men and women who have made the ultimate sacrifice defending freedom as well as those currently serving in foreign lands.

Enjoy the competition, encourage our athletes to compete to the best of their ability until the final horn sounds and to display their jubilation or disappointment in a honorable manner.

The award will be presented during the Alumni of Color Conference on March 3-4. The university will underwrite the related costs of traveling to Cambridge.

In their official notification the conference AOCC alumni and external relations wrote, "The selection committee felt that your efforts and achievements embody this year's conference theme: Growth, Strength, and Action: Honoring our Commitment to Communities and Individuals of Color."

Beauvais was nominated for the award by Amanda Takes War Bonnett, Editor and Publisher of the Lakota Country Times.

with the same line-item within the BIA. With stagnant budget increases within the BIA LES program, it is critical that we get Congress to fund both LES and JDC adequately so that they aren't competing for the same dollars."

President Bordeaux stated, "Councilman Ken Ladeaux addressed the issue of the Rosebud HIS Service Unit's prior management not properly billing its third-party insurance companies and creating an approximate $5 million deficit for our service unit. He expressed to our congressional delegation how this has affected the quality of services to our people. We did not have an optometrist for quite a while and because of the higher incidence of diabetes here we could have an increase in the number of undiagnosed vision problems.

"Our contract health funding is another big problem that needs to be solved and we have asked our congressional delegation to look at the current funding mechanism for it and how we can increase it. A lack of contract health funding is ruining our people's credit rating with regional hospitals to the point where they are going to fix it."

While in D.C. President Bordeaux and the RST Council representatives met with their lobbying firm of Holland and Knight and former US Senator Ben Night Horse-Campbell, who is now with this law firm. "We received an update from them on the political climate in Washington and how that is currently impacting Indian Country throughout the United Stated.

"They basically told us that if there was ever a time for us to be in D.C. the time was now. There is a lot of back-lash against tribes for their success in Indian Gaming and many in Congress want to place restrictions on our ability to operate casinos. We have to continue to tell our story on how gaming has helped us. However, we are still in desperate need of funding for our story on how gaming has helped us. However, we are still in desperate need of funding for our programs that help people who need it most here at Rosebud."

On economic development President Bordeaux told congress, " We need to keep our money at home by bringing business here, instead of going to Valentine, Pierre and Rapid City. Senator Johnson agreed with that statement. Senator Johnson told us about the time he went to the Crow Creek Indian Reservation when there was a series of unfortunate suicides with their youth and when he asked the students if they could work during the summers at the local businesses in town they told him 'there aren't any businesses here…there's nothing for us to do here.' We need to keep our money at home and create new jobs in the process."

President Bordeaux and a delegation from the tribal council will return to Washington, D.C. on Feb. 28 through March 1 for the winter session of the National Congress of American Indians. Bordeaux said, "At this meeting, the delegation will be lobbying for the FY '07 federal budgets. The proposed budgets for Indian Country are not adequate and some are totally eliminated. We need to lobby, along with NCAI, to offset these cuts and get our programs restored, at leas, to the FY '06 levels."

Rosebud IHS Hospital holds "Wiping of Tears" ceremony

Aberdeen area director Lee in attendance

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - As a way to kick off 2006 and establish a connection to the community, the Rosebud I.H.S. hospital held a "Wiping of the Tears" ceremony in the atrium at its facilities. CEO, Shelly Harris hosted the event and explained that the ceremony was meant to signal a new beginning for 2006 in the hospital's quest to be responsive to the needs of the Sicangu people.

Former Rosebud Hospital service unit director, Webster Two Hawk, Sr. was asked by the Lakota Country Times in Lakota if the ceremony had been conducted during his administration. He explained in Lakota that his administration had not undertaken the ceremony, but he had been invited to Sinte Gleska University in the 1970's by Stanley Red Bird, Sr. of the Medicine Men and Associates to have coffee and visit many times.

Two Hawk, Sr. also explained that long ago, the ceremony was a part of Lakota life. One was given coffee, food and water almost immediately after their loss by the community. He said that now it is done annually by some. He was aware that the late Bill Schweigmann had conducted the ceremony in the past and that incoming I.H.S. doctors were often given an orientation to the Lakota community.

On this day approximately 80 people were present as Roy Spotted War Bonnet purified the room with 'aziliya.' Most of those present were hospital staff, with a small number of community people in attendance. RST tribal council representative Russell Eagle Bear spoke in English on behalf of Sicangu medicine man Roy Stone, Sr. prior to the ceremony. He noted that Stone would be praying for all hospital personnel as they serve as healers.

RST tribal president Rodney M. Bordeaux also addressed the gathering by stating that his administration is supportive of the work of the new hospital administration. He noted that as a tribal member he desired to see the hospital operate successfully. He announced that he would be traveling to Washington, DC in a couple of weeks to lobby for the reauthorization of Indian Health Service funding.

Stone was accompanied by Tyrone Big Crow as he prayed for the staff. Afterward, CEO Harris invited everyone to share in the refreshments and to introduce themselves to each other.

I.H.S Aberdeen area director, Don Lee, was also invited to the ceremony and would be meeting with hospital staff during the day. He also be attended the RST tribal council later in the morning. When asked about his trip to Rosebud he said, "It is a beautiful day. I am pleased with the management at the Rosebud hospital. I saw a need and the importance of accountability in the Aberdeen Area. Shelly Harris was identified early on as CEO. She stepped up."

Lee has been the Aberdeen area director for three years and grew up on the Cheyenne River Sioux reservation. He said, "I went to St. Joseph's Indian School. I am knowledgeable of the funding and staffing needs. A lot of my decisions come from my heart because I come from these people."

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I think a lot of my brother, so much that if I hear a song on the radio that makes me think of him I'll cry.

He is living with his girlfriend who steps out on him all the time while he stays home with the children.

She uses him so much, but instead of him showing his feelings - it's me.

Will he ever come to his senses and leave her? He does have custody of the children, which may not all be his. We the family love him and the children, but dislike the way his life is being torn apart.

Hurting for him

Dear Hurting:

You indeed, are a compassionate woman. Now, here's the truth of what you can do and your responsibility in your brother's life. We are all souls on an earth journey. Your brother, like you and me, has his own path. On that path are many lessons and tests. There also may be what I refer to as "soul contracts" - agreements between individual souls to help each other on their life's journey. I know you understand that wisdom comes with a price, usually personal pain. Your brother has chosen this woman to teach him the truth of life and love. You can have faith that the Creator has not left him out of these lessons or the consequences that will propel him towards being a brighter star.

The lesson may not be about the dishonesty of the relationship itself, or the craziness and codependency that rules the relationship, but about recovery in his mental, emotional and spiritual understanding. The real test is not if he knows he's involved in insanity, codependency and dishonesty, but when he comes out the other side of it how he heals. Can he heal without blame and be able to accept his own responsibility for the whole mess? Can he recover without anger towards the woman that has be his partner in chaos? Can he accept his own responsibility for perpetuating it? Can he forgive himself and her for their interactions? Can he release the whole mess to the Creator without assuming the role of a victim of somebody else's power? He is also responsible for this relationship. He is choosing to be there and for the time being to remain there. He contributes to her bad behavior by "pushing" or triggering her buttons. They are in their own interactive pattern.

Yes, someday, probably sometime in the next five or six months, he will leave her. Then they will go back together again, and then they will break up, and then it will be over. That does not mean that the scars won't be there, the real question is, will he leave the relationship in a healthy enough way not to choose the same type of woman and dysfunction again?

Or, will he decide that he is a "victim" of her bad behavior and be full of anger and wrath, suffer from low self-esteem and repeat the same cycle. It's his life, and his lessons. What you can do is love him, his children, and pray real hard for his awakening and recovery. Blessings to you.

Dear Anna:

There is a large amount of money missing from my purse; can you tell me who took it?

Missing money

Dear Missing:

I will give you a description of the people involved in taking it, no names: There were two people involved. One distracted you while the other one went through your purse. They both knew that you had money. One is a young man, maybe in his late teens (early 20's?), and he may look slightly older than he is, but he is on the thin side. His hair is usually long, but either it has just been cut, or will be.

He has some pock marks on his face. He has a tooth problem right now, so may be in some pain. The other young man is younger and is under the influence of the older one. He will talk if you corner him. He is still in school. They are related to you; probably a nephew and his friend. Hope this helps you without alerting the public to these boys' identity and shame.

Dear Anna:

I am writing to you today out of worry. I have some important questions for you that are very dear and important to me. Lately I've received an email from another lady and she states that within the next 56 days there are going to be some changes in my life and that I will know exactly how my spouse feels about me and that there is going to be some surprises also.

So my questions that I wanted to ask is what do you see for me and my spouse, and can you see the child I am so desperately wanting in my life right now? Besides these questions I wanted to thank you for all your insight. I enjoy reading your column; you not only shed some light to the person directly asking, but to everyone that can relate to these situations.

Thank you, the worrier

Dear Worrier:

First, let me remind you that (generally speaking) psychics and such that send you mass mailings or emails are relatively f.o.s. (You figure it out). A generalization such as, "many changes for you…or surprises…or addressing you as worried or concerned with money issues…are so blah that they can fit the entire world. Not psychic, simply hype. Be careful where you spend your money.

Now, that aside, you are having some relationship issues…but they seem to stem from your not feeling loved enough. I would say that the mate I see in your life does care…and does love (but there is also social immaturity present). For some reason, however, you do not trust that love or him. Think again please about bringing a child into an insecure relationship. A child is not entertainment and they don't hold relationships together, and they are FOREVER. I do see you with a baby boy.

The time-line may be as far away as two years (or possibly pregnancy by spring/summer), but that is between you and the Creator, and I think that if you look at that, you better than anyone may understand the delay. I also see another child, a girl, so rest assured that you are not being left out of motherhood. It will come for you. Thank you for your kind words, they mean a lot to me.

Dear Anna:

I am writing to you because I've been trying to figure out why certain people - whom I don't even know - don't like me for whatever! Last week I was assaulted at Big Bat's for reasons that I'm not aware of! This woman came out of nowhere and just pushed me really hard so that I got hurt in the process.

My life is simple and I try hard to stay out of everyone's way, especially people like that individual. I'm a single parent of six children and I also work with the little tykes. My life was hard growing up here on the reservation but I don't complain because I feel that we make life what we want it to be! I stay away from gossip and gossip stays away from me, yet I have had friends talk about me, but from what I learned from the Red Road is that people carry garbage and if I want to be part of that then I'll carry it, but I choose not to, and that's just me. I've struggled all my life on this earth and I'm doing the best that I can for myself, yet people in general just hate me for some reason or another. They talk like I'm the topic of discussion for their day and so it goes - anyway, can you help me understand why they're like that and why I'm hated so much? Thank you.

Hated without reason

Dear Hated:

Many people are so miserably unhappy with themselves that when they come across someone who is okay - feels good about their path and how they handle themselves -they decide that you must think you're "someone special" and they want to convince you that you are wrong and you are not someone special.

People who are balanced are generally okay with themselves. They like who they are, how they handle their life, and admire the strength that they have shown to get through the hard times. This is not unhealthy. It does not place you above others, as those with low self-esteem feel. It is not your job to try and feel as miserable about yourself as they feel about themselves. Everyone knows that the number one problem with children is low self-esteem, so we try and teach our children to respect themselves. Yet, there are these ya-hoos that somehow decide if you're okay it is up to them to prove that you are not okay. They make it their personal mission to "call you out, or take you down." What usually happens is that it just confuses the okay person, and drives the "low-esteemer" into rage.

Also, people that walk in their own power bother others. You are doing a good job of not engaging with the insanity that approached you. If you find yourself being bashed (in this case literally), then know the only thing that you must take care of in the future, so that this doesn't happen again, is to pay closer attention to your environment. Don't shop late at night. Don't go around bars or other areas where drugs and alcohol are players. The message is simple: pay attention. To be the topic of gossip sometimes is not all bad.

You are a strong and powerful person. You are direct and sure. You do affect others around you. You do make an impact. You are interesting. People talk about interesting people, and they like to find things the matter with them so that they can feel a little better about themselves. Sometimes it may be that they just disagree with how you did something; just remember that is their right…but not their business. Remember that if they are saying mean things, then they don't really know you and are simply reflecting who they are and "shining it on at you." It is the thief who calls others dishonest, and the liar that doesn't believe anyone. There is a great book; it is called "The Four Agreements," by Don Ruiz (available at Borders). It teaches us basically not to take other people's stuff personally. It isn't about you, it's simply their stuff. It is a good book for everybody to read. It reminds us all and teaches us all not to get caught up in the "outer" world and other people's stuff. Blessings to you. Life will show its better side to you now; people will be more loving and respectful. You respect yourself, and now it will be reflected back at you. Very soon, you will be made a good offer for better money…it will feel SO good!

Rosebud tribal members enact civil rights group

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - The Owl Bonnet Civil and Human Rights group met at the St. Francis community center on Sunday, Feb. 19 at 1:00 p.m. The purpose was to elect officers for the rights group while considering future initiatives that the group might engage itself in.

A sign in sheet was available for sign-in and Home Whirlwind Soldier said the meal prayer. Whirlwind Soldier began the meeting by citing some very negligible statistics with respect to car accidents and the fact that many tribal members have to be flown out to Rapid City. The number of accidents from each community is alarming and he wondered what the reason was. He said, "The political climate is not healthy at Rosebud. It is hard to get doctors here because of politics."

Alfred Bone Shirt

Homer Whirlwind Soldier

A total of 13 people were in attendance at the meeting. Whirlwind Soldier made the point that others expressed a desire to be there, but had not shown up. He felt that if any future documents were drawn up their signatures could easily be secured from those who signed on as members, but were not at the meeting.

A number of people expressed their frustration at having their civil rights violated or knowing someone who had confronted the system and were contending with a number of complicating issues that were not being resolved. Ron Neiss, utilizing his previous RST council experience, spoke of his frustration of paying illegal taxes when shopping and paying his utilities. He noted that such taxes as the gross receipts tax, a public utility tax and a two percent tax that were levied when he paid his bills simply was illegal. It amounts to a tax commission issue that needs to be confronted.

Alfred Bone Shirt said, "We have to advocate for the civil rights of people. The only thing we have is the foundation of ourselves.

Apparently, there is a charter for a Sicangu Lakota Civil and Human Rights group that was passed by the RST tribal council on March 12, 1998.

Women's rights on shaky ground

BY ROSE CORDIER
Time's Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Ignoring requests from the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Treaty Council the Tribal Council approved a motion to bar women from sitting on the RST Treaty Council. The action has been termed by some as a huge set back for women's rights.

The motion was made at a tribal council meeting here on February 8, by Rosebud Councilwoman Fern Bordeaux-Boltz. At a previous meeting held on January 11, Bordeaux-Boltz made a similar motion requesting that the "individual female sitting on the treaty council be asked to resign her post and the at-large position be advertised."

Both motions were made on the basis of historical reasons according to Bordeaux-Boltz. Women were never allowed to sit on the Lakota treaty councils in the 1800s when the treaties were made,

Bordeaux-Boltz explained the historical rationale to the tribal council and several tribal council members agreed.

The tribal council action appears to be directly aimed at Valerie Crazy Bull, the lone female member of the RST Treaty Council who was elected to the position in April 2004.

In a January 24 letter to RST President Rodney Bordeaux, Crazy Bull expressed concerns that she is being unfairly discriminated against. Some treaty council members said they are surprised and disappointed in the tribal council's actions. "Valerie has done nothing wrong whatsoever to warrant this personal attack. She is a member in good standing and it is obvious that the tribal council has been used to launch a retaliatory effort against Valerie," stated a tribal member.

The RST Treaty Council discussed this issue at their meeting on February 7, and member Seth Big Crow made a motion to request the tribal council to rescind their motion for the "female" to resign from the treaty council. Big Crow said that women of the tribe have the same rights as men and their equal protection of the law is upheld by the tribal constitution, the Indian Bill of Rights, and the Indian Civil Rights Act.

The most recent newcomer to the nine member treaty council, Ruben McCloskey, disagreed with Big Crow. "If the federal government wanted

Tribal gaming compact is killed by House subcommittee

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

PIERRE - SB 167 entitled to "Revise the conditions under which the state may enter into gaming compacts with Indian tribes." was defeated in the House State Affairs Committee on Friday. The bill would have allowed the South Dakota legislature final say so in gaming compacts with tribes in terms of negotiating for additional machines and new casino locations.

Senator Dave Knudson was the sponsor of the bill and role call vote of 13-0-0 prevailed and deferred SB 167 to the thirty-sixth legislative day. Apparently, it is a coded reference to legislation that is essentially killed and will not see another vote in its present form.

Ruth Brown

Rep. Jim Bradford

Heretofore, the Governor has been appointed the sole representative for the state in negotiating gaming compacts with various Sioux tribes. This process is spelled out in the Indian Gaming Regulatory act and appears to work adequately for all involved. Eight of thirty states allow the Governor to be the final authority in this process.

Proponents of the state who were advocating for the legislature to remove this function from the Governor's office included several legislators on the House side. Opponents of the issue included the Governor's office, Kurt Luger, SD Great Plains Indian Gaming, Marc Allen, Flandreau Sioux Tribe, Ron His Horse is Thunder of the Standing Rock Sioux Tribe, and Rep. Paul Valandra.

In December the radio station took a step forward and provide through their website steaming audio for listeners with Internet.

Janis said, "We need dollars to continue to provide the Internet service. We have had 13,000 listeners since December from all over the world."

She said at the beginning the station was able to provide Internet access for 300 listeners at one time and since then had to cut it down to 100 in order to be affordable. "We are hoping to up that again but we need money to do it," she said.

A pow wow anniversary celebration will held at a later time she said and that will announced. She emphasized that the stations takes donations of any kinds, money, coffee cups, candles, coffee to name a few.

Civil rights group meets to elect officers

The Owl Bonnet group, however, desires to operate independently of tribal council interference and create their own charter at a future date.

The group agreed that the foundation of its existence must be traditional Lakota law and treaties. Whirlwind Soldier said that the group could be chartered under the traditional Owl Bonnet Council of Elders, which has a membership of 400 elders.

Whirlwind Soldier was elected as president of the group, while Alfred Bone Shirt was nominated at vice president.

Archie Beauvais was appointed the treasurer and Archie Little is the sergeant of arms. Other members in attendance included, Rose Stenstrom, Ron Neiss, Belva Black Lance, Levi Big Crow, Rosalie Whirlwind Soldier, Lillian Fast Dog. Amanda Takes War Bonnett of Martin was also a guest in attendance.

Whirlwind Soldier will announce the next meeting of the Owl Bonnet Civil and Human Rights group in two weeks and at that time the group will decide on the process to take complaints, while drafting a new charter.

women to sit on (the) treaty council, they would've let women sign our treaties," McCloskey stated emphatically, "I agree with the tribal council, women have their place and it's not on the treaty council!"

McCloskey was recently appointed to the RST Ethics Commission by the tribal council also.

Victor Douville, Sinte Gleska University professor and Lakota historian and author, addressed the treaty council stating that he was shocked when he heard the tribal council discussion and subsequent motion while the meeting was being broadcast over radio station KINI.

Douville said that our tribe should encourage and support ourwomen adding that, "Times change and sometimes we need to change with the times."

Present tribal law in regard to treaty council membership does not exclude women from sitting on the treaty council.

In fact, tribal records show that several women have held seats on the treaty council at various times over the past several years including Rose Bear Robe, Rita Means, and Linda Marshall. Tribal law also provides for due process of law for individuals before being removed from appointed positions.

When it was suggested to the tribal council that perhaps Crazy Bull's civil rights may have been violated by their action, Antelope Community Council Representative, Robert Moore, guaranteed the council that the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) would not touch the case if it was brought before them by Crazy Bull or anyone else.

Dorothy Marshall, Chairperson of the grassroots organization, Lakota Women for Change, said that the tribal council's action in this case adversely affects the entire female population of the tribe. Marshall said the group will discuss the discrimination issue at their next meeting on Sunday.

Gaming bill defeated

Opponents said that the process would be too cumbersome if it had to wait for the input of 105 legislators who only meet once a year. It would also lead to uncertainty in economic development for Sioux tribes as they would have to wait for the legislator to meet.

Rep. Jim Bradford said that the House sent the Senate a message in the unanimous vote and that the issue will not likely come again this year. In working behind the scenes Bradford said it was his job to get the tribal council representatives to the hearing. He also spoke to the committee members before the hearing was held. Bradford said that the call-in show on KILI radio was very helpful. He said, "We wanted our experts on gaming there. Also, Will Peters and Ruth Brown were present and that was helpful. We wanted a unified appearance. We agreed beforehand that there would be no negative comments made. We knew how they would vote as long as we stayed positive. The way they do business in Pierre is very professional."

Bradford predicted the defeat of this measure on Feb. 13 and at that time pleaded with the public to write their legislators and to ask them to oppose the legislation. Sen. Theresa Two Bulls of Pine Ridge also went on record as opposing this issue earlier.

Will Peters, council representative for Pine Ridge and Ruth Brown, council representative from Eagle Nest district went on air on KILI Radio 90.1 F.M. on Wednesday and Thursday last week and urged community members to call or email their state legislators to oppose SB 167. Peters challenged the people to take an interest and strongly oppose the bill and to be heard.

The Oglala Sioux tribe and the Rosebud Sioux tribe have been hopeful that if they collaborate with other Sioux tribes in South Dakota and approach the Governor enmasse he may be open to negotiating for more machine and other locations without interference or input of the legislature.

Such gaming compacts are vital to the economic forecast of tribal budgets. For example, the level of profits that the Rosebud Sioux Tribe has experienced from its casino has essentially moderated. More creative ways to utilize the profits will have to be explored or negotiations may have to be examined in order to increase the number of gaming devices or the possibility of negotiating for an additional casino cannot be abandoned.

Whirlwind Soldier released on bond

RAPID CITY -- A Rosebud public official facing a drug charge has been released from jail on a personal recognizance bond.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Mark Moreno agreed last week to release Travis Whirlwind Soldier, 28, Mission, from custody on several conditions, including one requiring him to live with his uncle, Timothy Colombe, in Rapid City. Whirlwind Soldier was ordered to remain at Colombe's home daily between 10 p.m. and 7 a.m.

Whirlwind Soldier has served as the Rosebud Sioux Tribe's public defender for about two years. He was arrested Dec. 19 at the tribal courthouse after being indicted on a charge of conspiracy to distribute a controlled substance, in connection with an alleged conspiracy to distribute methamphetamine between Oct. 1, 2003, and Aug. 18, 2005.

Under the conditions of his release, Whirlwind Soldier was also ordered not to enter Rosebud Indian Reservation without court authorization and not to contact any of the 49 people listed in the court order.

If convicted of the charge, Whirlwind Soldier could face a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison and a $1 million fine.

Casey helps South Dakota State avenge early season loss to NDSU

Pine Ridge rolling into District 14A with number one seed and momentum

BY TOM CRASH
Time's Correspondent

BROOKINGS - "This was a great win for us, both long overdue and much needed," said SDSU coach, Scott Nagy following the SDSU 67-65 win Saturday over North Dakota State University, "It was a real team effort, the football players contributed, Jose stepped up for a good game and Mackenzie Casey came out in the second half and gave us the energy and spark we needed to get the win; he is the quickest ballplayer on the team and we used him to counteract the physical play of the Bison guards."

Casey, a sophomore from Wounded Knee and a graduate of Red Cloud, hit the floor running with just under 14 minutes left in the game. The point guard quickly hit a pull up jumper for two points and followed it up midway through the second half with a catch and shoot three pointer from the top of the key. Late in the game as points became a premium he curled around his defender for a lay-up giving the Jacks a three point lead. SDSU had both of their remaining big men foul out with over five minutes left in the game and football players, Chris Wagner and Matt Steffin came in and helped SDSU hold on for the win.

In mid January North Dakota State clobbered the Jackrabbits 86-56 and later went on to upset Wisconsin in Madison, a team rated number 13 in the nation at the time. SDSU overcame the suspension of their top two rebounders, junior Mohamed Berte and red shirt freshman Andre Gilbert and used four football players to augment the undermanned Jacks. Matt Cadwell struggled all game to get his shots to fall but ended up with 16 points. Ben Beran helped with 15 points and Michael Loney chipped in 14 as SDSU picked up their eighth win of the season against 17 losses.

"We lost our top scorer at the end of November and had our top two rebounders suspended at the end of January and we had to recruit some players from the football team, its been a tough year," said Nagy, "but I want to say that players like Mackenzie have really helped, he has a great attitude, works hard every day in practice and is ready to contribute whenever he is called on each game."

Casey started the year in a regular rotation but through the last part of the season has been on a roller coaster as for as playing time getting 20 minutes against Minnesota, two minutes against southeast Missouri and 25 minutes in Bozeman against Montana State. and two and a half in the overtime loss to Middle Tennessee State.

SDSU finishes the season, their first full year with a Division I schedule, on the road with a game Wednesday in Ft. Wayne, Ind. Saturday in Edinburg, Tex. against Texas Pan American and two games in PINE RIDGE - The Custer Wildcats with coach Larry Luitjens back in the harness kept the game close with Pine Ridge on Saturday down by only two at the end of three quarters but the Thorpes lit up the nets for 29 points in the fourth while holding the Wildcats to just five points for a 60-34 win in Pine Ridge.

Pine Ridge, Todd County qualify two wrestlers a piece to the State A Wrestling tourney in Watertown

Michaud moves up to 189, qualifies with a second

BY TOM CRASH
Time's Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - After wrestling all year at 171 pounds, compiling a 30-1 record and a number two ranking in the state at 171, Dave "Bulldawg" Michaud, a junior at Pine Ridge, was forced to move up to 189 in the Region 3A tourney and lost out in the championship 5-3 to Jade Cowan, a senior from Pierre.

"After the injury to his neck became such a problem, we didn't know if he would even wrestle at all for the rest of this year," said Dave Michaud, Sr., Pine Ridge coach, "Bulldawg had to rest to let it recuperate enough to wrestle in the regions, so we had no choice to move him up and as it is the doctor will only let compete if he agrees to not get a cortisone shot or take any pain killers so ideally the pain will keep him from injuring it further."

Albert Her Many Horses, a junior from Todd County, took third in the regions and will take a 30-7 record and a ranking of ninth in 125 to the state tourney in Watertown this weekend. Her Many Horses will face Josh LeMair, a junior from Madison who is 22-14 on the season.

Chris Rahn, also a junior at Todd County, took third in the heavyweight, 275 pounds and will take his 24-12 record up against Joe Darrington, a senior from Brookings with a 20-14 record.

Kellie Pulliam, a senior from Pine Ridge, qualified for state by taking fourth in 135; his season record is 31-14 and he will wrestle Shaun Larsen, a senior from Sturgis who comes in at 38-6. Pulliam ended up on crutches after taking an injury default in his third place match.

Michaud says he'll be ready for his match on Friday at State. "Bulldawg was really hurting before the final match and I wanted him to forfeit the final match, he wouldn't," said coach Michaud, "I'm worried about him injuring his neck more and he's talking about winning the whole thing." Bulldawg took second last year in state at 160.

Derrick Locke, a sophomore from Tiospa Zina won this year's Lakota Nation wrestling tourney at 275 and even though he has been playing basketball all season has qualified for the State B Wrestling tourney scheduled for Friday and Saturday at the Barnett Center in Aberdeen. Locke's season record stands at 9-3 and he will face Seth Dawson, a junior from Howard who comes in at 27-10.

The top four wrestlers in each weight division qualify for the state wrestling tourney.

Lady Thorpes knock off St. Stephans and McLaughlin, finish regular season on a high note

PINE RIDGE - St. Stephans blew into town from Arapaho, WYO on Monday and the Lady Thorpes rang up 76 second half points for a 131-45 win on Monday. For the second time this year Pine Ridge hit for 130 plus points in a game. During the Lakota Nation, Pine Ridge knocked off Crazy Horse 130-10.

Six girls hit double figures for Pine Ridge as the Lady Thorpes picked up their 11th win of the season. Deana Big Crow scored 21 of her game high 28 points in the second half, Keisha Brewer finished with 27 points and 10 rebounds while Robin Webber hit for three threes and 19 points. Lacey Weston helped with 14 points and 12 boards and Sophia Janis ended up with 11 points. Christian Janis, an eighth grader came up two assists short of a triple double as she hit for 13 points, grabbed 11 rebounds and dished out eight assists.

Up 55-22 at the half, Pine Ridge hit for 31 points in the third and 45 in the fourth. Devon Red Cloud chipped in nine points of the bench and Amanda Catches added seven.

On Thursday, Pine Ridge braved the snow and cold weather to travel to McLaughlin and closed out the regular season with a 74-60 win over the McLaughlin Lady Midgets.

Balanced scoring set the tone for the Lady Thorpes as they broke open a close game in the fourth behind Lacey Weston's five field goals and Robin Webbers eight points; up by five after one and only four after the second and third quarters, Pine Ridge rolled to the 14 point road win with a strong fourth quarter.

Lacey Weston scored a game high 21 points and grabbed 11 rebounds while Deana Big Crow helped with 13 points, Keisha Brewer added 12, Robin Webber had 12 and Aimee Pond chipped in 10. Germaine Morrison and Carissa Brown Otter led McLaughlin with 15 points

Pine Ridge finished the regular season with a record of 12-8 and with the number three seed in District 14A travel to Kyle Tuesday for their first round game with Little Wound, the number two seed in the district. Bennett County earned the number one seed and will host St. Francis on Tuesday. Winners play on Thursday at Rapid City Stevens for the District 14A championship and the opportunity to move on to the region 7A game and the chance to go to the State A tourney in Mitchell, the second weekend of March.

Pine Ridge and Little Wound have played three times this year with Little Wound winning all three, 60-49 at the Lakota Nation, 73-63 in overtime at Kyle and 64-62 in Huron for the Dakota Oyate Challenge championship.

Little Wound finished off their regular season on Saturday with 57-43 win over Crow Creek and ended up with a 16-2 record, their Friday game with Cheyenne Eagle Butte was cancelled due to the weather.

Lady Tetons struggle on the road with two losses as season winds down

DEVILS LAKE, N.Dak. - In two road games this week,the Lady Tetons of Williston State held the lead at the half but couldn't finish it out as they lost to Lake Region State College 76-59 and to Miles Community College 95-90 in two overtimes.

In a hard fought battle with the Royals, the Lady Tetons were up 34-33 at the half but turnovers got the best of them as they turned the ball over 24 times to just 11 for Lake Region. Pine Ridge's Laura Big Crow helped the cause with 17 points and nine rebounds while Red Cloud's Tate Locust chipped in four points as WSC loses for the third time this season to Lake Region.

Earlier in the week, the Lady Tetons traveled to Miles Community College in Montana and once again held a lead at the half, this time up by three but end up tied at 69 at the end of regulation and tied at 82 at the end of the first overtime only to lose it in the second OT 95-90. Big Crow led the team with 24 points while Locust added four off the bench.

Williston State has a record of 21-6 with two home games left on the regular season schedule as they host Dawson Community College on Monday and finish their schedule hosting Bismarck State on March 1 with regionals set for March 8.

'Call to action" heard lound and clear by Lakota Oyate

The flurry of activity and the "Call To Action" last week by Will Peters, OST council representative from Pine Ridge and Ruth Brown, OST council representative from Eagle Nest district was reminiscent of getting out the vote for Senator Tim Johnson and Representative Stephanie Herseth a couple of years ago.

The purpose was to rally people to call respective state legislators to vote against SB 167 which would have spelled doom for negotiating tribal gaming compacts with the Governor of South Dakota.

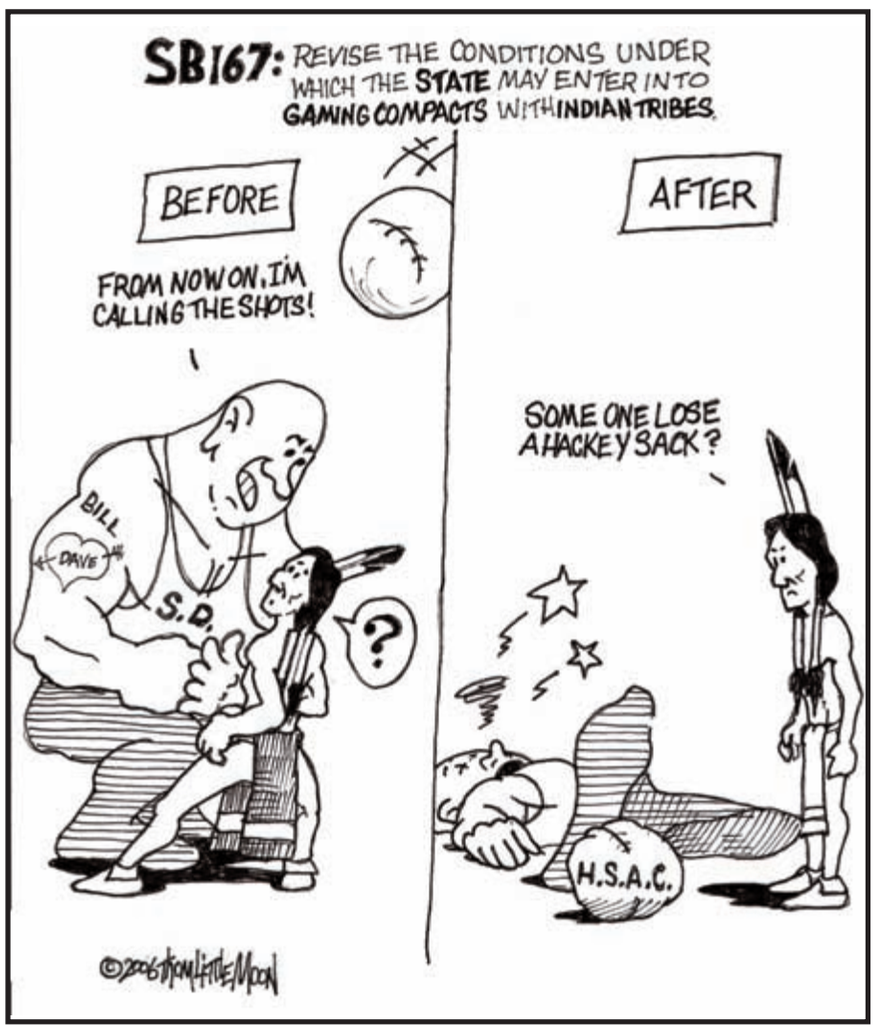
At present, the Governor is the sole authority when negotiating with the nine tribes within the state's boundaries. Any interference by the state legislature in curtailing that process surely would have impacted any long term economic development planning, since they only meet once a year.

For any skeptics who think that working behind the scenes is a waste of time and accomplishes nothing, the defeat of SB 167 is a clear example that sensitizing people to the issues that could potentially affect them is an obligation that we all need to share in.

The benefit that we all share in when something good comes out of such lobbying also reminds us that we all need to lobby also.

Two weeks ago in Lakota Country Times, Rep. Jim Bradford urged people to take opposition to the anti-tribal gaming bill and it takes unity to protect the resources of the tribes.

The Lakota Oyate were witness this past week to what true unity can actually accomplish. We can develop and implement our own presence in this state with unity and communication.



The lesson learned on that cold Friday morning in Pierre, was that as a strong united people we send a message to the state of South Dakota that our voice matters and that our voice will no longer be silenced.

We think they got the message.

Another fine example of 'watch dog' status is the state Senatorial campaigns two years ago, which tribal nations within the state banded to show their vote.

Thankfully, Lakota people do not always lose in South Dakota as there are many state legislators who believe in a common sense approach to resolving such contentious issues and this was borne out by the unanimous vote against SB 167.

We applaud the the state legislators voting their conscience. And we applaude the Lakota people for demanding that vote.

Thoughts that come from the heart

'Blackout' brings back memories of storytelling nights

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Yesterday night, the lights went out in 'Georgia', but it didn't really happen as it did in Georgia, it was more of a cold, dark, spooky night rather than the implications of the song.

Actually what happened was the power went out in area of Martin, Kyle, Allen, Sharp's Corner and Pine Ridge for more than four hours. I was at work, tending to the paper as this was deadline night. The lights went out and to be honest, I thought my lights went out. I heard a pop and everything went black and I had to touch my face to make sure I was still where I was suppose to be.

Although the event put us a little behind in our quest to get the paper, it proved to be a learning experience for me.

I used the light on my 'commod' cell phone to find my way out of the office and to my car. From that point I made my way to my nieces where I waited until the lights came back on. During that time, several of us women who belong in our women's society got together and waited together with warm blankets, and candles,that sent warm yellow flickers of light across the walls. We had no TV, no radio, even our cell phones went dead after awhile.

Watching the flickering of those candles brought back memories of my childhood when I listened to my mother, who I thought and still think today was the greatest storyteller there ever was, tell stories at night while with the just the light from the fire of the big woodstove glowing across the room. Her name was Rebecca Cottier-Apple and she was instrumental in giving me the structure of what I am today.

My mother had 10 children of her own, and two step daughters. When she died, she had 68 grandchildren and 98 grand children and four great grand children.

She died in 1998 at the age of 76-years old and she left a legacy in her children, grand children and great grandchildren.

I loved my mother very much. My adolescent years I spent with her came at a time when she had time to teach me. At that time, there was the last three of us younger children in the home and I was the oldest of the three. She gave me love, responsibility and she taught me lessons in life. She had the time to do it because we were all she had in the home.

When I was ten years old and younger, I was around her a lot and I and my younger siblings slept with her until I and my sister were old enough to have our own bed. Or I should say, until we got a bigger house to have our own bed.

My most influential lessons came at night. The oldest children lived downstairs and had their wood stove and we slept upstairs with a big black wood stove to keep us warm at night. At night my dad would keep the fire going.

It was those times when the fire was going but it was still chilly against the wall where I lay. The quilts she made kept us warm. They were made of heavy cloth and tacked. I felt the warmth of her love as she would stroke my forehead and I lay all wrapped in quilts and there is where I learned stories that taught me about life and what values I took with me into my adulthood.

She would tell stories that took me into a world where I learned about values and what to expect in life.

She was a great story teller, as she was a writer and she taught with those skills, things we needed to know in life. She had that storytelling knack where I could hear the feel the wind, see the details of the prairie she described, see the characters in full form and feel the emotions of happiness, contentment, sadness and what we learned from the outcome of the story. Mostly every story had a moral.

I learned to respect myself as a woman from those stories and I learned about the "trickster" that could trick me in life if I let him.

I put myself into those characters she wove out of words and emotion. She told us many stories and how we took the stories created a story of our own. Some of those stories taught me my morals and my values of life.

She was a gifted storyteller and maybe I thougth she was because I didn't have have modern entertainment tools during that time to compare her abilities.

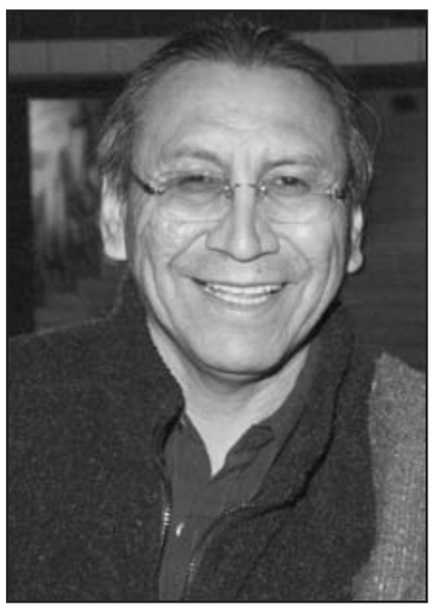
Those were the times before we had a television blarring in our living room, sometimes in every other room. Those were the times before CDs, stereos and video games and Internet that keep our children occupied.

Today we have to take the best of our traditional upbringing and incorporate it with what our children have to deal with in their environment and give them a foundation to succeed in.

Eagle Hunter violated cultural protocol

Dear Editor

On Feb. 3, I rode on horse back, along with my family and friends following the Sacred Staff. Even though there was no tobacco offered to meet and discuss the Bundle that Pte San Win brought to our people, I chose to come to a meeting to address these negative concerns as called by Butch Chasing Hawk, also known as Eagle Hunter. Even though these things should not happen while my family is in mourning, this is part of our traditional knowledge.



I felt that through prayer, good things can come from this meeting. It was decided to follow the protocols of this Bundle and ride with prayers of forgiveness of how we, the Lakota, have lost our ways and make good of the negative that has already begun. By this I mean that protocols in even discussing the Bundle of Pte San Win were not met by the 'man' who called the meeting, so we did our best to bring goodness to what has already happened.

My relatives, with help from the Tribe, ended up feeding and housing the People, which were not prepared by Eagle Hunter and his "followers", they did not follow traditional protocol. When a person calls the people together, they were to provide for the people. Many people came, all chipping in with gas money and needs for the meeting, from Pine Ridge, Rosebud, Standing Rock, including Dakota relatives from the east. A financial hardship that was uncalled for.

The meeting was documented by Elders with tape recorders and video footage from the Cultural Center and people. So what I am saying here is true.

There were many instances that happened in the meeting that showed the Traditional People the lack of respect. Even as the Staffs were brought in and presented, Eagle Hunter pushed his way to speak, ignoring the request for opening prayers for a good meeting and he began his accusations. After his speech, he would not even stand in respect or remove his covering of his hat, when we finally did make prayers. The prayers made were for the Oyate, Unci Maka and for good things to come from the meeting.

Eagle Hunter began to explain the interpretation of "san" as in Pte San win. His thoughts were that it really meant old grey buffalo. "San" can mean grey, faded or white, it is a sacred name that can mean different colors, but our people always identified the color as white, as in "a-nu kan san" meaning that the eagle has white at both ends. His then even challenged the People that they are following this way of life and questioned their lack of knowledge in the seven sacred rites

Arvol Looking Horse

Instead he stated the cultural values and virtues were the seven sacred rites. The seven sacred rites are ceremonies that we were passed down to help the People in our cultural 'way of life' for health and honor of themselves, on behalf of their Oyate. With those rites came protocols and responsibilities in order to maintain them in a good way, on behalf of the future generations to come.

The Bundle is a spirit and travels with me. Many of the People who bring me to these gatherings know this as being true. This is what I see is the problem in Eagle Hunter and the five people who stood with him at his meeting, they do not understand the Bundle's strength of being a spirit, that travels anywhere in the world, where even just tobacco is laid down, we can still connect to the help of the Tunka Oyate (spirits, grandfathers) through the Bundle, to seek help in our health and concerns.

During the meeting, two other people stood up with accusations, Shirley and Derek Fiddler. Both of them stated inaccurate history of the Bundle and the sacred gourd that I retrieved from the Pierre Museum that belonged to our Grandfather Elk Head. It was decided back then, because of their family's constant controversy of being more closely related, that my family allowed them to take the sacred gourd in a good way through ceremony of passing to Buzzie Black Bear. We felt maybe this would assist them in bringing them back to following our Traditional way of life. Grandfather Elk Head had chosen to follow Christianity with his family.

This was the reason why my Great Grandmother was passed the Bundle, but keep in mind; it was passed through reaching an understanding through prayer for the decision that included Elk Head himself. Even then in concern of the gourd, Buzzie chose to not go through the ceremony

It's hard to 'Indianize' institutions in Lakota Country

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

It is hard to "Indianize" institutions in Lakota country

When Indian self-determination, Indian education and cultural pride was really getting off the ground in the 1970s, we mistakenly thought that the percentage of Lakota people employed in our local institutions would increase dramatically and if nothing else, the percentage of Indian to non-Indians would be consistent with the populations they served. Boy, were we ever wrong.

Our tribal colleges, public schools, tribal schools and the hospitals, on the contrary, do not employ enough of our own people. With the entire payroll that is generated in Lakota country, most of it surely goes off of the 'rez' and does not get turned over.

If more Lakota people were employed in our communities the money would stay here and be utilized by small business entrepreneurs to create other opportunities for Lakota people.

There is no easy answer to increasing the percentage of Lakota people.

We have many non-Indians who work amongst us and for those of us who would like to see more of a Lakota workforce, that sentiment might be seen as a racist statement. However, former Rosebud Sioux Tribe chairman, Charles Colombe, said that it wasn't right that we had a relatively high number of non-tribal members working at our casino.

This is our homeland and we should be able to advocate for more Lakota people to serve as positive role model. We need our own lawyers, physicians, teachers and blue color workforce.

For those Lakota people who earned their credentials and training years ago, they probably cannot believe that the number of Lakota people working in our vital institutions has not increased to any significant degree. Our children need to see people who look like them, staring back at them and only then will they see that they can be teachers, doctors and lawyers and even, Indian chiefs.

The fact that our culture is being assaulted and bombarded by outside influences speaks to the need to reclaim and revitalize our language. It is slipping to the wayside ever so slowly and one day we will awaken and realize that only a small percentage of people speak Lakota. It's a sad scenario, but we can increase morale and decrease our staggering unemployment rate if would hire our own talented people. I don't really count, however, as I am unemployed part time and there isn't much call for doctoral level credentials in my community. I really should have filtered into white society and taken one of their jobs from them, much like we see in our own backyard.

I have some very dear white friends, so anything I say is not personal and they realize that. In fact, one of my white friends often says that Lakota people have a right to be prejudiced themselves as much has been taken from us in the form of land, natural resources and our pride.

It probably will not get any easier as we continue to employ many outsiders who have no significant stake in our communities, but there are no easy answers.

Many work here during the day, but live in a neighboring town that don't like Lakota people anyway. They would never think about enrolling their children in our schools, but that's another issue.

Anyway, I would challenge every institution on the 'rez' to hire more Lakota people, but that would be only wishful thinking.

We tend not to be cohesive as a people and that kind of tension among our own leads to the hiring of more outsiders who will not represent a threat to us. It is an interesting mix of politics and employment. And so it is just another day on the 'rez' where the common Lakota loses over and over again.

Notes From Indian Country

South Dakota legislator likens abortion to slavery

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

Whenever the elected representatives in South Dakota gather for their annual assembly, I cringe.

There is a bill advancing in the South Dakota State Legislature, HB1215 that would place a ban on nearly all abortions.

South Dakota hopes to get itself on the national map by presenting itself as the guinea pig for anti-abortionists. Knowing full well that the action will be challenged and end up in front of the U. S. Supreme Court, the determinedly naïve delegates are willing to spend $1 million dollars of the taxpayer's money for this dubious distinction. Oh yes, they also claim that an anonymous donor is willing to foot the bill. Who is that donor and what are his, her or its motives? Our local daily mentioned the donation but did not investigate the donor.

Two representatives with a little common sense, Dale Hargens, D-Miller, and Tom Hennies, R-Rapid City, offered amendments to allow abortions for victims of rape or incest.

This prompted Larry Rhoden, R-Union Center, to bleat, "The way life is conceived does not lessen the preciousness of that life." That's right Mr. Rhoden, the pregnant woman should be forced to live with the assault or the act of incest for the rest of her life.

I don't mean to be flip about this but I am continuously appalled at the extreme right turn the state representatives have taken in the past few years. Mind you, these legislators are the descendants of those settlers who smiled in agreement when an editorial by L. Frank Baum in the Aberdeen (SD) Saturday Review, called for the extermination of the Indian people of South Dakota six days after the Massacre at Wounded Knee. Of course, we all know that Baum went on to national acclaim when 10 years later, he wrote "The Wizard of Oz."

In the 1970s when Indian women accused the Indian Health Service of secretly sterilizing them, their protests fell on deaf ears. Of course, these same legislators would have thought of this procedure as just another form of birth control and a bit more effective than the "abstinence" they a pushing.

Having published the obituaries in newspapers I have owned for the past 25 years, I know without a doubt that Indian babies are dying at a proportion much higher than that of the state's white population. I had to print their pitiful obits every week. Not once in all of those years did I ever hear one state representative cry out indignantly over this dreadful situation.

In support of his vote to ban abortion, Rhoden said, "At one time slavery was constitutional until somebody stood up, challenged it and said enough is enough." Slavery is comparable to abortion? Now where in the world did Rhoden come up with this twisted logic?

As I wrote recently, most white South Dakotans still believe Indians do not pay taxes and that we all get a check from the government every month. If they haven't got past this misconception in more than 100 years, where can we find progress?

At the massacre of Indian people at Wounded Knee and Sand Creek, American soldiers drove bayonets into the bellies of pregnant women killing the baby and the mother.

My point is that the biggest problem in South Dakota is not Roe v. Wade. Instead it is the horrendous race relations between Indians and whites. Many white visitors from back East are stunned to hear the racist remarks about Indians made to them by lifelong South Dakotans. As one visitor was told by a local, "Oh, you have to live here and see these drunks and crooks up close before you would ever understand."

I believe in human rights because I have seen the violation of human rights continuously in my 71 years on this earth and have, indeed, been a victim of the violation of those rights. Women have rights. They do not deserve to be pushed into a corner by those who use selective words like "Pro-life" to intimidate them. Of course this clearly makes the assumption that if one is not "Pro-life" they are "Pro-death."

I am neither "Pro-life" nor "Pro-death." Instead I am "Pro-woman." I also believe that what happens between a woman and her doctor is none of my business. But when a legislative body presumes that they can dictate the personal choices of a woman by law, I find that reprehensible.

Some of you should think back to the days when a man named Al Smith ran for the presidency of the United States and was attacked frequently because he was a Catholic. You may also recall when the Rev. Norman Vincent Peale assailed John F. Kennedy for his Catholicism. The reasoning was that Smith and Kennedy would get their instructions from Rome. This prompted Kennedy to retort; "Sometimes I find Paul appealing and Peale appalling."

But we should remember that instructions and decrees to the different Catholic churches and its parishioners in America do come from the Pope and they are then dispensed locally. I therefore find it ironic that there are now two Catholic Supreme Court Justices sitting on that bench and everyone knows that the Pope is opposed to abortion. Is there anything else the Pope is opposed that might find its way into the decisions of these two justices?

Abortion was not unknown to the indigenous people of this continent. When the hard times of famine became prevalent, Indian women reacted accordingly and kept the population down until better times arrived.

If this proposed law against abortion moves forward, all we can do in South Dakota is sit back and watch it wind its way to the Supreme Court. I think I will be ashamed to come from a state where the minority rights of women are trampled under because of the religious beliefs of the majority.

to pass on the sacred gourd, instead, waited outside the inipi and took it and left. They made words that were not true that they won it in probate and court. Those laws do not have a place or voice in our Traditional 'way of life'. Even now I feel bad that the gourd that called me in storage at the museum to find; may not be used in the good way as intended.

Eagle Hunter spoke and left soon after, this showed me that he is not a traditional person. My sisters were going to present Eagle Hunter with a star quilt showing good relations, even after the trouble he was causing in our time of mourning, to show good energy, but even that he passed up. Instead he left in disrespect and did not sit and listen to the response of his accusations, no matter how hard it is. I had thought that this was the main reason why he posted in the paper, was to understand. He did not talk of his main issue of why the Itazipcola should have the Bundle and why he felt we were not following our traditions and culture, as he stated in the paper.

In the end, Dana Dupree spoke of researching Eagle Hunter's lineage and he is not an Itazipcola, therefore he spoke out of line again. Dana also testified the inaccuracy of Shirley Fiddler's statements were untrue of the gourd; with documentation available on record of that transaction.

They violated protocol, told lies and showed lack of respect for the Bundle and the teachings, bringing yet more confusion to our Oyate. Even so, they are my relatives; I will continue to hold their health and well-being in my prayers; to one day stand with us in prayer for what we face together in the sad future for our Oyate. But in the mean time, according to our traditional knowledge, they have crossed those boundaries of proper protocol and only produced violations that end up with this kind of decision - they no longer have a voice to gather the Oyate or discuss the Sacred Bundle!

RST President Bordeaux provides update on his administration

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Time's Correspondent

ROSEBUD - In an effort to demonstrate open government and promote accessibility by the tribal membership, RST president Rodney M. Bordeaux provided an update on his first three and a half months in office. He was interviewed by Richard Iyotte of KINI 95.5 FM radio as a matter of public record and enumerated several priorities and initiatives that his office is working toward.

Bordeaux said, "I enjoy my work for the Sicangu oyate and with the tribal council." His administration is establishing tribal council committees, appointing a fair board, getting land leases set, and working resolutions to be passed for the 2007 federal budget. He noted that he has been working with his program directors in formulating a budget. Bordeaux said he was concerned at the prospect of the Johnson O'Malley being cut, as well as school construction funds.

He said, "RST program directors develop position statement and resolutions, while the council establishes priorities for funding. The list of priorities for funding include a host of tribal programs, including veterans affairs, childcare, the Spotted Tail Crisis Center, LIHEAP, the Wanbli Wiconi center, the tribal utilities commission, and education. A list of funding priorities was provided to the office of Sen. Tim Johnson."

Chief of Staff Michael LaPointe has been working hard on funding request and these will also be provided to the office of Sen. John Thune and Rep. Stephanie Herseth, according to Bordeaux's report.

Rodney Bordeaux, RST tribal president

There is a need to work closely with the South Dakota congressional delegation and the National Congress of American Indians in addressing concerns about the 2007 budget cuts as proposed by President Bush. Bordeaux said that RST has several lobbyists in Washington, DC in Ben Nighthorse Campbell, Shannon Atcitty and Night and Holland.

Adequate funding for the Indian Health Service hospital is always a concern for RST. Bordeaux noted that the per capita funding of $1,900.00 per patient was lower than that for prisoners in this country. Bordeaux's office recognizes the need to advocate for the re-authorization of more health care funds. He said there was a need to elevate the profile and importance of the I.H.S. in the hierarchy that is the federal government.

He said, "We need to constantly remind Congress of their treaty obligations when it comes to health care. Washington can't forget about us. Treaties are the supreme law of the land and we need to educate new congressmen."

The state of South Dakota is often at odds with RST and Bordeaux cited the work of the Defenders of the Black Hills as an example to establish a buffer zone around Bear Butte which was ultimately defeated in the legislature.

He did cite the case of SB 167, which would have allowed the state legislature to have the final word in negotiating gaming compacts with Indian tribes. The measure was defeated in a House committee.

Bordeaux also spoke of his relationship to other Sioux tribes in the region as well as his concern about the prospect of President Bush selling off public lands in the Black Hills.

His other priorities included finalizing the missile defense contract and going after more funds to continue that work which will provide 25-30 new technical jobs. A tribal grocery store in Mission and a substance abuse treatment center to treat methamphetamine abusers is also a priority. The ambulance service is in need of more funding, as well as LIHEAP. The jail and veterans program also have immediate needs that must be met also, according to Bordeaux. He noted that the tribal court needs more funds also, as well as the need for a generator at the Spotted Tail crisis center.

Finally, Bordeaux said the casino had a good showing in January compared to the three previous months and the key to generating more income is in the marketing of new ideas and campaigns to attract people.

In closing, Bordeaux's message to the youth was, "I want to encourage the youth to think of the future. Where are you going to be in fifteen years? You need to set goals and keep track of them. Study hard and it will pay off. Many will sit here.

"Get involved and talk to the council. I appreciate your involvement. It is your government. I am here to serve you. The tribal council and the BIA and the Indian Health Service is here to serve you."

Area community is getting re-acquainted with singer Jim Young

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Sicangu Lakota singer and songwriter, Jim Young, has returned home to the Rosebud. It is a place that he says he has never forgotten no matter where his travels take him. Tahansi Jim and wife Sharyn Richards are gracious hosts as they share a meal and talk about his journey as a gifted singer and writer.

Sharyn accepted the position of Contract Health Services administrator at the Rosebud hospital having served as the patient advocate and minority veterans program coordinator at the Veteran Administration in Hot Springs.

In fact, he says, "My people are buried in St. Francis. This is home. I have been to many places and at times I would simply get lonesome for frybread, beans and rez talk."

Young grew up in St. Francis and his parents are Spencer and Katherine Young. He attended St. Francis Mission back in the 1960's and when he saw his parents playing music he knew that he wanted to do the same. He has not had any formal lessons in music, but today is able to write a song and put it to music rather quickly; it is a task that many other singers are unable to do.

Jim Young has written the songs for his newest CD which will soon be produced. Photo by Amanda Takes War Bonnett.

KINI Radio in St. Francis is also featuring an interview with Young about his career in the music industry with Richard Iyotte general manager and, thus, the Rosebud is getting acquainted with a lifelong passion that has its roots in Young's early years. He said good friends like Leslie Short Bull and Freddie One Star were influential in sparking an interest in music.

Young spoke of the inspiration that guides him when creating music. He said, "My songs are about my experiences in life; things that touch my soul, situations that I've witnessed and found interesting. Also historical events and past leaders that I want to honor like Crazy Horse, Spotted Tail and Cloud. There are also special people like our veterans and warriors which inspired the song, "They Cut Their Names in Stone."

His latest album "Born an Indian Man" is about the reservation, about Kilgore Road. He said, "I had so many Kolas who died on that road." He honors Lakota women with World champion bronc rider Willert honored at Kyle

BY AMANDA TAKES WAR BONNETT
Times Correspondent

KYLE - Jeffery Willert, 2005 World Saddle Bronc Riding Champion, paid a special visit to the Pine Ridge reservation last week and stopped in at Little Wound School and spoke to the elementary and middle school students.

Willert, 23 years, is from Belvidere and nabbed his first world title by winning a record $278,169 for the year. He beat out his saddle bronc riding idol last year Billy Etbauer and broke a record held by Glen O'Neill.

He spoke to the students at Little Wound of his success. Ruth Brown, Eagle Nest district council representative, originally planned to honor Willert before the tribal council meeting that was to be Feb. 9 but the meeting was cancelled. Brown said she was thankful to the elementary and middle school principal at Little Wound School to have the honoring there in such short notice. The Porcupine drum group sang the honor song. She applauded the students for their fine behavior and showing respect to the cowboys and in joining them for a round dance. Also in attendance was Barney White Face and Austin Watkins, other tribal council members.

Pine Ridge dental clinic provides services to help children's oral health

PINE RIDGE - The Pine Ridge Dental Clinic in conjunction with the Oglala Sioux Tribe Oral Health Educator is celebrating Children's Dental Health Month this February. They have been busy presenting oral health care information in the schools and at area health fairs.

The daily routine of caring for children's teeth is important to a healthy smile. It is time to begin caring for children's teeth from the time they first appear in the mouth. Parents can use small soft-bristled infant toothbrushes dampened with water to clean the gums gently after feedings and at bedtime.

It is important for a parent to help their child brush their teeth until the child is able to effectively brush on their own, this is usually until the age of seven. Use a pea-sized amount of fluoridated toothpaste while moving the toothbrush in a circular motion on all surfaces of each tooth in the mouth. Set a time to brush together and a habit will soon develop.

Children should visit an oral health care provider for the first time at age 1. A major concern for this age group is Early Childhood Caries (cavities). Dental providers can take this opportunity to check the teeth and review the diet and oral habits of the child. This is also a good time to give the child a fluoride varnish treatment. Fluoride varnish has been proven to help cut the cavity rate in half for infants and small children. Pine Ridge, Kyle, and Wanblee Dental Clinics offer free fluoride varnishes to all children on a walk-in basis. To celebrate the child's first birthday, the Pine Ridge Dental Clinic welcomes them to the clinic by giving them a sippy-cup, toothbrush and toothpaste as well as a fluoride varnish.

Older children are educated on how to take care of their teeth and gums through brushing, flossing, nutrition, and lifestyle habits. The 5-13 age group is more likely to have dental sealants placed on the biting surface of their teeth to help prevent cavities. This is done at the schools as well as in the clinic. Their diet is also of importance; special attention is paid to the over consumption of pop and sport drinks. Counseling for the cessation of spit tobacco and smoking are offered, as well as the screening for enamel for national finals rodeo.

According to the Indians National Finals Rodeo, Hunter was one of the most talented bronc riders in both the Professional and Indian rodeo circuits. His talent is showcased in the Indian National Finals Rodeo logo which bears Hunter's actual bronc-riding image.

In his 20s, Hunter, was ranked as one of the most promising new crew of saddle bronc riders going down the road. He had both the mental and physical abilities, which is needed to be successful in rodeo.

Hunter got started on the professional rodeo trail right after high school. The pro-rodeo circuit turned out to be more grueling than he had anticipated. "It was pretty hard back then for an Indian cowboy to do any good in the PRCA. There was prejudice against Indians, and it was hard to fit in." However, this didn't seem to discourage Hunter because he qualified for the National Finals Rodeo in 1976, '79, and '80.

When the Indian rodeo circuit started to become competitive, Hunter found that he enjoyed competing in those rodeos. Entry fees were considerable cheaper than pro rodeo, and a contestant didn't have to travel all over the country to gain enough points to qualify for the finals. Plus, it is fun to mix with other native tribes. Hunter qualified for the Indian National Finals Rodeo 14 times throughout his career and won the INFR Saddle Bronc Championship in 1980, '87,'88, and '90.

On Aug. 19, 1995, a great rodeo cowboy was seriously injured doing what he loved the most - riding saddle broncs. Hunter was defending his Saddle Bronc Championship Title at the Crow Fair Rodeo, in Crow Agency, Mont., when he was injured. The 44-year-old cowboy received serious brain injuries from that ride. He was inducted into the South Dakota Hall of Fame in November of 2001. To this day, his image has been immortalized in the INFR logo as he is the epitome of an Indian rodeo legend.

Petition to split Charles Mix County circulating

MITCHELL (AP) - Someone has formed a petition in Charles Mix County that will - if successful and if it would succeed in a public vote - literally divide the county.

But although the petition has been out in public places since early this month, no one seems to know exactly who started the petition or even how many people have signed it.

Wally Johnson, a landowner near Geddes, says he knows who is circulating the petition, but won't identify the person.

"I know, but I can't tell you," he said. "It was basically started to test the water. The main reason the person started it was they wanted to get it out in the open … so someone will notice it."

Johnson said he allowed the person to run out extra copies of the petition on his copier, but other than that, says he does not know how the petition started.

"The big thing is, it's a long county and it's just a long ways," he said. "I really am not sure how it all got started. I've heard about this for two or three years."Ralph Nachtigal said a copy of the petition was dropped off at the Platte Enterprise by former county commissioner Bruce Bakken and has some support, but no one is willing to circulate it.

"All kinds of people have said they would sign it, but no one will circulate it," said Nachtigal, the paper's editor.

The petition calls for a division of the county, placing La Roche, Lake George, Castalia, Hamilton, Signal, Platte, Forbes, Carroll, Darlington, Rhoda and Jackson townships in the proposed Hill County, with the rest remaining in Charles Mix County.

The fact that the dividing line the petition proposes happens to coincide with where Charles Mix County borders the Yankton Indian Reservation isn't an accident, according to Charon Asetoyer, executive director of the Native American Women's Health Education Resource Center.

Asetoyer feels the petition's timing, soon after Charles Mix County lost a lawsuit filed by the ACLU against Charles Mix County, says it all. The lawsuit accused the county of diluting voting districts.

The county was directed by Judge Larry Piersol in 2005 to re-district the three County Commission districts in the county to provide a district with an American Indian majority. Piersol has not ruled whether or not a redistricting plan submitted by the county is acceptable.

"Basically, as far as I'm concerned (the petition is) coming out of a racist response," Asetoyer said. "That's not healthy. You can't tell me it's not in response to that case.

"I don't know how many signatures they've got. One of the things that they mentioned (in defense of the petition was) infrastructure and roads. Our roads over here are horrible; we want those same things, too. They don't want to share leadership decisions with a potentially Native American person to be elected to the County Commission. They can't tell me their desire to work on infrastructure and roads doesn't exist at this end of county. They really don't want to share the leadership with a Native American person."

John Stekly, mayor of Platte, which is located in the northern section of Charles Mix County, said there are differences between the northern and southern ends of the county.

"Our weather here is different and our ideology is different, too from one end of the county to the other," he said.

According to Charles Mix County Commissioner Keith Mushitz, the idea of changing the county's boundaries isn't a new concept.

"There's been talk for the last 10 years for dividing the county," he said. "This is the first time a petition has been drawn. We've got a diverse county. It's 105 miles from the northwest corner to the southeast corner. There's just different needs at different ends of the county."

But Stekly also said the chances of this petition being successful are very low.

"I think it's a stretch to think this is going to really happen," he said. "I haven't talked to one person that's says this is going to fly."

Signatures from 15 percent of registered voters in the county are needed on the petitions for the County Commission to "submit the question of the division of a county to the voters in the county at the next general election," according to state law.

The petition must be filed with the county auditor no later than the first Monday in July of any general election year.

OST police force faces reduction of 59 officers

PINE RIDGE (AP) - More than half the police officers in the Oglala Sioux Tribe's Department of Public Safety will be out of work when a federal grant ends in March.

By April 1, 59 officers will be let go because a Community Oriented Policing Services (COPS) grant will end, said Capt. Patrick Mills of Pine Ridge.

Twenty-nine police officers will remain, but everyone in the department and the tribe will be affected, said Mills, who was hired as captain in December.

Chief of Police Ron Duke said 88 officers now patrol the 1,800 miles of roads covering the 3.2 million acres of land to serve the 50,000 people who live on the reservation.

Because of the reservation's land size, population density and crime rate, Duke said the department ideally would need 150 officers to operate effectively in answering the nearly 3,000 emergency calls received each month.

But because of the nation's growing deficit, the war in Iraq and federal budget cutbacks at the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Department of Justice and Indian Health Services, the department's budget supports only 29 officers, Duke said.

``The Department of Justice appropriated $18 million for 500 tribes to fight over for their entire law enforcement operations,'' he said.

``It's ridiculous,'' Duke added.

To combat the personnel shortage, Duke said the department will try to develop a precinct in each of the reservation's nine districts. The plan is to keep police within minutes of the scene of an emergency call, rather than the time it takes to drive from either Kyle or Pine Ridge, the former police headquarters when the department operated within two divisions.

Monica Terkildsen, OST Department of Public Safety grants specialist, said Duke would appear before the House Appropriations Committee in March to testify about the OST department's law enforcement shortage.

If something doesn't change, two-thirds of the police officers who answer domestic disputes, medical emergencies, provide security at the hospital or public meetings won't be there, she said.

``We just don't sleep well, thinking about what might happen,'' Terkildsen said.

Young: 'They cut their name in stone' from page B1

the song "Lakota Woman." In his travels, he admits to helping talented young people in any way that he is able. He said, "When I see talented kids, boys or girls, who can sing there has to be an outlet. There should be a special fund for special kids. Once you see a kid's eyes light up that is special. I have bought them guitars, keyboards and set them up with instruction."

Young served in the U.S. Army during the Vietnam era and his military occupational specialty or MOS was operating room specialist, which he took advanced training for in Ft. Sam Houston, Texas.

One of his best-known songs is a haunting reminder of the many young soldiers who died in Vietnam and whose names are inscribed on "The Wall" in Washington, DC. His song "They Cut their Names in Stone" is absolutely touching for any Vietnam veteran who survived the war and returned home. He says that many a Vietnam veteran has been brought to tears the first time they hear the song. As a matter of fact, Young has also sung at the opening of the smaller replica, "The Moving Wall" which has visited many communities including the Rosebud reservation.

Young said he has diversified his style by doing songs that are gospel, Native contemporary, Christmas, and now he is working on an album of country music. He sang a song entitled "Make me a Rainbow" that is yet unreleased and it will surely be a hit when it is on the market. Young says that at age 58 he knows he is not going to be a big star, but through writing songs he can introduce society to the great talents of Native singers. He would like to see Native contemporary music become as commonplace and mainstream as rock and roll or country music, as the market is open to that.

Of the Rosebud he says, "There is so much talent here. Music in one avenue, also painting." An exciting venture that Young would like to accomplish for those with musical talent is open a studio where they can record their songs and have them in-hand as they try to market their work. It is a project he will discuss with his manager, as he is the one who will play a major role.

In his many travels, presentations, and subsequent question and answer sessions, he notes that people are simply starved about information about Native Americans. He says, "Questions come up like what's it's like to be on the rez. They think it is like a concentration camp." He says his biggest thrill is playing venues in the eastern and southern states. He once played at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and was asked to come back anytime.

Young's manager, David Grover, is also his "hunka" brother who owns a recording studio in West Stockbridge, MA. Grover and his wife do the background music for Young and also take care of the distribution. Young said, "I do major concerts. I opened for 'Big and Rich." He continued, "I am comfortable with singing my songs at powwows and all over the country. I sang for the astronaut John Harrington in Cocoa Beach, FL."

In recent years, he desires to sing and write about the Lakota. His songs "Legend of Crazy Horse" and "The Trail of Tears" fit that genre of music. He does research and reading in the library to verify factual information about people whom he writes about.

Young suffered a heart attack while at a wake and funeral in Batesland in September 2005. His wife, Sharyn, drove him to the Pine Ridge hospital and he was airlifted to the Rapid City Regional Hospital where doctors told him that he has lost half his heart's ability to function properly. Sharyn recounted the harrowing ride to Pine Ridge. She drove while Jim's life hung in the balance, he said his goodbyes and she refused to listen to him.

Today, Young is optimistically looking down the road as he plans that recording studio and the writing of many more songs. He is grateful to 'hankasi' Sharyn as he notes, "If it wasn't for Sharyn…, she left the door open for me. She took care of the bills. She sacrificed a lot."

Sharyn said, "It is an honor and a privilege for me to work for my people, and I'm very grateful to be here in Rosebud, to have brought Jim home, finally."

The Youngs were great hosts for the evening and a bigger treat was hearing his music live; any more song requests and visitors might have had to pull out their checkbooks. The Rosebud reservation is getting better acquainted with the music of one of their own. It's the kind of music that is sometimes haunting and at other times it might move one to tears. It's the kind of unforgettable stuff that Jim Young is working to communicate in his songs.

Young's music is available at Prairie Edge Music Gallery, Rapid City, SD; locally at the Starlite Gift Shop in Mission and, online at www.davidgover.com. You can also order directly from Young by calling his home at 605-747-2003 or by writing to him at PO Box 288, Rosebud, SD 57570.

damage that is seen on the front teeth from the over use of highly acidic lemons and pickles.

The Dental Clinic recommends Xylitol products. Xylitol is a natural sweetener that helps fight cavities by reducing the number of cavity-causing bacteria in the mouth. Xylitol gum is recommended for all new mothers because it is effective in reducing the spread of cavity causing bacteria from the new mother's mouth to the sterile baby's mouth; hence, the baby is less likely to get early childhood caries. Several brands of over-the-counter gums and toothpastes now have adequate amounts of xylitol for cavity prevention.

The Dental Clinic encourages everyone to get involved with their children's oral health. Practice and teach preventive habits to the children involved in your life so that they can enjoy a healthy smile!

Janet Robideau led living wage campaign and is focus of struggle for dignity forum

BY TOM KATUS
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Janet Robideau, executive director of Montana People's Action and Indian People's Action and a Northern Cheyenne tribal member, presented on a living wage campaign she led in Missoula, Mont.

The campaign was one of three interrelated topics presented at the "Struggle for Dignity" forum at the Mother Butler Center on Feb. 18. Other speakers included Charles Abourezk, attorney, speaking on "The Globalization of Labor" and Mike Howe, labor leader from the Carpenters Union, presenting on "Workers' Rights are Human Rights." The Saturday forum was followed by a traditional Lakota meal prepared by the Oglala Lakota College American Indian Business Leaders students.

Workers' rights are human rights

Mike Howe kicked off the forum, explaining what unions are and how they benefit workers. He stated, "A union is a group of workers who bond together for mutual benefits. They are united by their desire for fair wages, benefits and a safe working place." He compared union workers to non-union.

Nationally, non-union workers earn an average of $642 per week, 68 percent have health care and only 16 percent have pensions. By contrast, union workers receive an average of $781 per week, 92 percent have health care and 73 percent pensions. Currently in the United States, there are 13.5 million workers who have a union, but another 57 million want one but haven't been able to organize. He compared union to non-union states. In non-union states, of which South Dakota is one, the poverty rate is 13.4 percent, workers with no health care are 16 percent, average household income is $40,000, and per-student spending is $6,500. In union states, the poverty rate is 12 percent, those without health care are 13 percent, household income is $48,000 and per-student spending is $9,200. In his subsequent remarks, Abourezk noted that in the 1950s, one-third of all workers had the support of unions. Today, only 13 percent of all workers receive union support.

Howe continued, "The disparity between the workers and executives has increased dramatically in the last 20 years. "The work place has changed dramatically in the last 30 years," continued Howe. "In 1974, the US company standard was set by General Motors, which provided good middle-class union wages, competitive health insurance and good pensions.

In 2004, the standard bearer is Wal-Mart, which pays poverty wages, expensive health insurance for its senior staff and none for 60 percent of its associates, no pensions and is adamantly opposed to unions."

"I would encourage participants to get behind the Employee Free Choice Act (SB 842 and HR 1696). Lead sponsors are Sen. Kennedy (D-Mass) and Arlen Specter (R-Penn). In the House, the lead sponsors are Congressman George Miller (D-Calif.) and Peter King (R-NY). There are more than 270 co-sponsors. The bill will change labor organizing laws to allow elections if 30 percent of employees in a given business request them.

If 60 percent sign cards that they want a union, no election will be required. This is the same system that Canada has used for years," concluded Howe. Both Senator Johnson and Congresswoman Herseth support this legislation. Senator John Thune does not.

Janet Robideaux

Globalization of labor

Charles Abourezk gave a well-thought-out prepared speech. Before he started, he said, "I want to thank Mike Howe, the Oglala Lakota College students and others for putting this important forum together." He wove a long history of how corporations control not only the United States but the entire globe.

He stated, "The Exxon Corporation made $39 billion in windfall profits this last quarter alone. Meanwhile, we have a Congressional investigation that $79 billion has been wasted on the war in Iraq, and IHS is operating at 50 percent of its needed budget. This administration has a policy of 'no corporation has been left behind.'" Abourezk quoted Rev. Joseph Lowry at Coretta King's funeral castigating Bush and concluding, "We have billions more for war but no more for the poor."

Abourezk maintained that we must remember the promises of the 60s and 70s when we were taking the message of human rights to all the people of the globe.

From financier Warren Buffett, he quoted, "We are becoming a private society divided between owners and share croppers. Instead, we should return to the values of a public sharing society for all." Abourezk stated, "The current session of the South Dakota Legislature makes you sick. It's like we've been transported back to the 1800s. Even with the Governor's support, we could not even get a measly $6 minimum wage passed in South Dakota."

When Wal-Mart began to promote itself in the early 90s, it proudly claimed to be "an American company" promoting American products. However, it soon switched to relying on cheap goods from the third world, especially China. Today, 85 percent of all Wal-Mart's goods are manufactured in China. "There is nothing American about Wal-Mart except the billions of dollars going to the Walton family and their investors."

Former Governor Janklow enticed Citicorp to come to the state by making our usury laws the most slack in the nation. Between his two terms as governor, Janklow had a retainer with Citicorp of $750,000. When Premier Credit Card came into Spearfish, they had two wage scales. They maintained a high scale for their out-of-state officials they brought in and a much lower scale for their South Dakota employees. "Today, when we are talking to telemarketers, they are frequently people living in Bombay who have to get up at 2 a.m. in the morning to answer our phone calls. They are paid pennies an hour for their labor."

In the new world of corporate control, boundaries and even nation-states are irrelevant. Multinational corporations exist that are not under the control of any government. Global economies have reverted to feudalism. The multinational corporations are the new kings, and our Congress and national governments are the new overlords of feudalism. The masses have again become the peasants.

"We always do better as a nation when we care about each other. For too long, we have allowed these global forces to divide us. Our 'struggle for dignity' is not just for the powerless but also to once again provide dignity to the powerful," said Abourezk.

Native led living wage campaign

Janet Robideau was the final panelist and probably the most engaging.

She gave a brief history of Montana People's Action, which has 3,600 members throughout the state. Because Native people were not joining MPA, in 1997 Robideau also organized Indian People's Action, a separate chapter of MPA that has 700 dues-paying members. "IPA and MPA combined give us strength in numbers," said Robideau.

While Robideau was raised on the Northern Cheyenne Reservation in Lame Deer, she left the reservation when she graduated from high school and received a bachelor's degree in psychology and later a masters.

Even with those credentials, the best work she could find in Missoula was as a nurse's aide. Soon after beginning work at a nursing home, she organized the workers into a Caregivers Union. She said, "I found that in the nursing home, there were good Indians and bad Indians, good whites and bad whites, good nurses' aides and bad nurses' aides. I took the best of all and helped organize us into an effective union. Both my union organizing and my work with MPA made it clear to me that poor white folks also suffer. But if we work together, we can have much greater impact than if we stay segregated in our separate communities."

"Because there were so many working poor in Missoula, in 1997, we kicked off our living wage city ordinance campaign. We researched our community, found out what companies paid their employees and tax breaks they received. We then analyzed what an average family of four needed in their monthly budget for housing, food, transportation, health, taxes, miscellaneous and savings. When we researched the community, we found that even MPA was not paying our employees a living wage. We quickly rectified that. Do your research. You don't want to get caught with your pants down."

"We couldn't convince a majority of our City Council to pass a living wage ordinance, so we filed petitions and put it on a city-wide referendum. We carried out a whole series of activities, but primarily, we went door to door in our communities. We tabled events, we had mailings, we explained to people what we were asking for and why," Robideau continued.

A company that was enticed to locate in Missoula was Sun Mountain Sports. It received more than $200,000 in tax deferred subsidies from the city for locating there. They had 75 employees but paid them low level wages and no health care. Sun Mountain received a 10 year deferment on its taxes. When year 11 rolled around when they would first have to pay taxes, they shut the company down and moved it to Asia. Meanwhile, many of the 75 former workers had carpal tunnel syndrome, caused by repetitious work required in manufacturing golf club bags.

"Ultimately, we collected 15,888 petition signatures of the 10,000 we needed. We received strong opposition from the Chamber of Commerce, which tried to scare the small businesses and from the publisher Lee Enterprises, which ran eight editorials against us in the last two weeks of the campaign." Lee Enterprises is the same company that owns The Rapid City Journal. "Despite all these obstacles, we had the highest turnout for a local election in the history of Missoula. In the end, we won with 52 percent of the vote. One of the good things with our massive coalition building and organizing is we rebuilt a strong relationship to our faith-based communities, who supported us."

She concluded, "No one, no how, nowhere has the right to make you feel less than you are. No matter what you do or what you are, you have the right to dignity. As we told our opposition in Missoula, 'You may have the money, but we have the people,' and ultimately, we had the votes."

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I am 29 years old and I am wondering if I will ever get pregnant soon. My husband and I have been trying forever and I want to know if I am going to be with child anytime in the future. I am very good with children and also so is my husband, I would also like to know if I will grow old with my husband or will I end up back with the ex, you see some time ago I spoke with a lady and she predicted that I would go back to my ex , but honestly Anna, I don't care for or have any feelings for the ex.

I am very, very happy with my husband, and I am aching to know, it has been bugging me. Please let me know!!!!

Curious wife

Dear Curious wife,

Smiles all around. I do see pregnancy, probably in late summer or early fall. There is a possibility of more than one child. I do not agree with psychic you consulted. You and your husband will have a very long term marriage. I do not see your ex entering your picture at all. Congratulations on your honesty with yourself. You are in what I call a conscious relationship.

Dear Anna,

I've been trying to come to a decision lately and I see this as very important but I am scared the decision I am referring to is rather to do with a commitment on my significant other or not one, one hand I feel as if I will be adding some time to his and my life and on the other hand he said if I ever try to do this he will never forgive me.

He asks for help all the time and this is the only way I can see it may not make him stop for good but it will help his body try to fight what is happening what do you see for us if I do this will he really resent me? What will happen to us?

Scared

Dear Scared,

Commitments made from a sense of necessity to bring balance to another person will never work. It's called co-dependency. A commitment made in a relationship is easy when everything is right when you have doubts, consider it your internal warning system.

Pay attention to yourself. Follow your heart and know that you are not responsible for anybody else's mental wellness. Marriage is not a cure.

Dear Anna,

I feel like I am stuck at the place in my life where you told me about a friend who would come into my like shortly. Forgive me if I sound like I don't believe you but how can I be sure. You see I have prayed for a long time and seems like at this point when I come to that point in my life. And some times I feel like I am getting into some thing called I am not good enough.

I am not looking for a companion cause I am hoping my ex will grow up, or forgive his past or I feel like a fool for allowing myself being with someone who wanted to be with me because I am a Lakota woman who was a medicine man's daughter.

Anna, why do I feel like it seems easy for women who can find there soul mates from friends or relatives. I guess I wasn't raised to feel that way, so those things are a no no.

I really don't go anywhere, except to sweats, I spend a lot of time sewing my star quilts, trying to pay bills. And where I visit my relatives are in AA or Al-non so when I talk about a man I get labeled because of past abuse ex-husband or boyfriend I am a man hater. That's why I don't look.

It would be so nice to have a friend who can travel with me to ceremonies cause I travel a lot in the summer time sometimes to sell beadwork, my quilts or just support many friends or my daughter's son.

I have a relative who is very controlling and for the past couple years since my father died she has been coming into my life trying to telling me how, why, should not, but she uses me to tell people about my father bless his soul I was told she is very jealous of What do I do? She goes to all the sweats ceremonies, she tells people who don't know me lies, half truth things I haven't paid attention to her .

I have been really unhappy here on the reservation mainly because I was brought up to have a home, I have a teenage daughter who I am concerned about, in Denver she had nice friends some church friends, friends she met at sundances and pow wows. Do you see me going back to Denver?

I am getting frustrated with myself I can be a patient person, I like and love turtles I will be patience a lot more if I can get some feed back. I know you told me that when this man come I shouldn't push him away why is that I feel like I am taking a look at my life seriously.

Help

Dear Help:

You are such a powerful woman, you have a tendency to look men straight in the eye, this makes them nervous. They sorta feel naked in front of you. Learn to soften your eye contact. There is a wonderful man in the future. The man that I see for you is Lakota and does not live here. He will come and you will know him. He is as strong and powerful as you are. You are truly a healer and helper of others. On that path, you will meet him. He is one in a million and it takes quite a long time for two rare beings to find each other. Be patient.

Denver is a possibility. It is likely to lead you to the south west. This spring and early summer will bring you many answers and a new direction. As for the woman who gossips about you. We will all pray for her. She will feel the sting of her own bad words coming back to her tenfold. You are doing well to ignore her.

Dear Anna,

I am 21 years old and I live with my mother. I guess I am the last one out of my house and I am getting exciting about eventually getting out on my own.

I just want to get out of this town and off the reservation and do things on my own. I stay with my mom because she is alone, my dad left us some time ago and I love my mom a lot but I feel bad for her. She seems so sad and doesn't try to date and I worry about her. I don't want to leave until I know she will be happy. What do you see for me?

At home for my mom

Dear At Home

I do see an opportunity through education to leave home in the fall. Don't worry your mother will be fine. She is a strong woman. I also see a job opportunity for coupled with this education opportunity that will take you anywhere you want to go.

It looks as though as you are planning like a ten day vacation with some friends. This will provide a good opportunity to consider the many options in your future. Good Luck!

CRST sets priorities

EAGLE BUTTE - The Cheyenne River tribal government is acting on the recent proposed cuts by President Bush.

"We can't just stay at home anymore and hope that we will get funded for our programs because there are severe budget cuts to all our programs. The President's released his 2007 Budget Request on Feb. 6, 2006 and besides more cuts, entire programs are being eliminated. We have to defend our funding so our people can have jobs and services." said Harold Frazier, chairman of the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe. "Every year our Congressional Delegation asks us what our top priorities are, and that is difficult to answer because all of our tribal programs are priorities" said Frazier. "As a result of advocating for tribal programs the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe has received an increase in Congressional appropriations and we have been able to educate Members of Congress about the needs of the Tribe."

"The hospital is one of our main priorities especially now that the Indian Health Service cut out the construction cost for FY 2007" said Frazier. The Office of Indian Education Programs has announced that they are in the process of restructuring the BIA education systems and CRST is slated to lose their Line Office.

"Restructuring means loss of jobs and education for our children. The cost of the restructuring is estimated to be around $17 million, $17 million that can be used to provide better pay for the teachers, books and classrooms for the children" said Chairman Frazier.

The Tribal delegation traveled to Washington, DC during the week of Feb. 13 and will again travel to Washington, DC the week of Feb. 20.

33rd annual walk held to remember Wounded Knee occupation

WOUNDED KNEE - More than 100 Lakota people from all ages, tribes and backgrounds walked from east, south, west and north, meeting at the heart of the reservation on Monday, Feb. 27 to commemorate the occupation of Wounded Knee in 1973 by the American Indian Movement.

The political and social atmosphere of the early 1970s was such that the American Indian Movement desired to make a statement on the world stage and call attention to the tremendous unemployment and poverty conditions on many reservations.

The siege as seen in the federal government's military response drew national media to Wounded Knee and the occupation was carefully documented by several news outlets. A recent documentary entitled, "Tattoo on My Heart" produced by Charles Abourezk was recently seen on South Dakota Public Television.

The walk is intended to remember the occupation of Wounded Knee in the spring of 1973. Many people's lives were changed during that point in time. Entire families split down the proverbial middle, picking and choosing sides from the many factions alive and prospering at that historic time.

The participants walked as many as eight miles to the site of the Wounded Knee Massacre, now bearing the remains of the church and the gravesite.

Most of the walkers from Manderson were walking in memory of Dave Clifford, longtime AIM supporter and organizer for the walkers entering from the West. The site of the 1973 Wounded Knee Occupation and historic Wounded Knee Massacre are revered as a sacred site which holds historical ties to the Oglala Lakota and surrounding tribes

Many elderly, children and horseback riders participated in the walk. The delegation from the south, for example were walking in memory of Geraldine Janis, one of the first organizers of the commemoration walk, starting several years ago with her guidance and leadership.

Janis's daughter, Eileen Janis of Pine Ridge said, "She organized the walk from the south and made us walk with her." Roberta White Calf added, "Even when it was ice cold and a blizzard." There were others Janis said, "Lessanes Killer, Evie Deon, Dave Clifford, Edgar Bear Runner, Cedric Young Bear and we can't forget Leonard Peltier. He'll be incarcerated for 30years now."

Legislation amended concerning parental neglect

PIERRE - HB 1180 in its original version would have allowed parents to be prosecuted if they intentionally neglected their children. The legislation said that parents who intentionally deprive their children of food, shelter, clothing and medical care should be brought up on charges.

That section was amended during subsequent debate which was somewhat contentious. The two provisions which were inserted included the fact that it will be a Class 6 felony for parents or guardians who knowingly permit the physical or sexual abuse of a child. Also, it will be a Class I misdemeanor for any person to knowingly cause a child to be present where any person is distributing or manufacturing methamphetamine.

Proponents of the proposed legislation before the amendment said that it was necessary, despite the fact that current laws already on the books seek to protect children. They further note that some people are able to avoid charges even thought they neglect their children. Sen. Gene Abdallah of Sioux Falls could be heard on the legislative website as he said parents who abuse their children should be prepared to go to

Shakopee wants to improve communications

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - "What we want more than anything else is to assist the Oglala Sioux Tribe with a positive economic development venture," said Keith Anderson, Secretary/ Treasurer of the Shakopee Mdewankanton Sioux Community, "we have no interest in your land or in ending up with your casino, we want to end up with a very successful development venture that will be positive for you and your members."

Anderson addressed the meeting in the council chambers of the Red Cloud Building in Pine Ridge on Friday. Due to a lack of a quorum, the meeting originally scheduled as a council meeting, became an executive board meeting as the OST vice president, secretary and treasurer attended with as many as seven council members.

Mike Harper, an attorney for Shakopee, addressed the council on Thursday at Billy Mills Hall in Pine Ridge, about some of the concerns that had come up over the Prairie Wind Casino construction project. The SMSC was concerned about the project not meeting the timeline set down and agreed upon by all of the parties connected to the project and about the number of change orders that had already been implemented.

Peska Construction, when making their presentation, stated that the project was 63 days behind schedule with the difficulty in getting drawdowns completed in a timely manner and the confusion over the role of TERO cited as the two biggest problems contributing to the delays.

The previous week a delegation had traveled to Shakopee to open up better lines of communication and deal with some of the problem areas. The trip did result in the distribution of the entire paperwork package on the project and was distributed to the council, executive board and districts this past week.

Some of the local players met on Wednesday at the casino, the council met on Thursday and part of the council and the executive board met on Friday.

"We really wanted to understand better all of the groups and organizations that were involved in the project," said Harper after listening to council members, elders and community members on Thursday, "what role does the EDA committee have, TERO, Tim Bowman, Peska, the tribe's finance committee and individ-

Group wants to protect Bear Butte

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

STURGIS - A Mato Paha Strategic Planning Summit was held at the Meade county extension building on Saturday and Sunday, February 25 and 26 along with a press conference held at 2:00 p.m. on Sunday.

The Bear Butte International Alliance coordinated the effort along with Owe Aku and the Intertribal Coalition to Defend the Bear Butte. Tribal Chiefs, council persons and enrolled members from Manderson, Rosebud, Lake Andes, Wagner, Lantry and Spearfish attended the Summit. Viola and Don Hatch from Canton, Oklahoma were there to represent the Southern Cheyenne and Arapaho. Eugene Limpy, Sr representing the Northern Cheyenne will also be making a report to his Tribal Council.

Nancy Kile, a resident of Sturgis, is a spokesperson for purposes of disseminating information to the media. She said, "It was a planning summit and we invited organizers and people interested in working with details. We are trying to get a cohesive movement going to strategize to protect Bear Butte short and long term." The rally development will continue east of Sturgis, Meade county is allowing reckless development because of private property traditions of no zoning.

The strategic planning summit meeting was attended by some 35-40 people and facilitated by Lori Weahkee, a Zuni / Navajo, and executive director of Sage Council, Albuquerque, N.M. Faith Spotted Eagle, Braveheart Society of Lake Andes, Ihahktonwan acted as co-facilitator. Spotted Eagle spoke of effective organizing and the group dynamics that can occur when people organize. She emphasized the fact that there is a lot of trauma involved in cultural preservation work and such efforts to organize.

Spotted Eagle also took five young people to the meeting who contributed to the topics under discussion, as it is their future lives the movement will impact.

Kile noted that there is need for the groups to organize resources and see what kind of campaign might be forthcoming for the coalition. The Great Plains Tribal Chairman's Association committed resources and endorsed a working group to protect sacred sites in the Black Hills as well as put together a Mato Paha Preservation Fund. In fact, the association chairs are in the process of appointing a preservation officer to come to future meetings.

The Bear Butte International Alliance, which is a project of Sicangu Way of Life issued a press release announcing the meeting in which they wrote, "This winter we are witnessing the construction of an amphitheatre to hold 35,000 concert goers just 2.5 miles from Mato Paha, along with a tremendous amount of rally related construction just east of Sturgis." The press release went on to note that, "It is the Bear Butte International Alliance, Owe Aku, and the Intertribal Coalition to Defend Bear Butte's desire to ensure that the movement to protect this sacred site will not lose its momentum."

Oglala Sioux tribal vice president Alex White Plume also spoke to the group, as did Debbie White Plume of Owe Aku. Carter Camp, who has spoken rather eloquently about the plight of Bear Butte in recent months also addressed the group and announced the Gathering of Nations to Protect Bear Butte to take place in July at Bear Butte. Casey Camp, Ponca, attended the summit to announce the support of her Tribes traditional women's society toward this summers gathering at Bear Butte. The Black Hills Sioux Nation Treaty Council and the Oglala Sioux Tribe both provided resolutions supporting a reasonable buffer zone around Bear Butte and all sacred sites in the Black Hills.

Carter Camp, Ponca, will take the lead in speaking to respective Lakota tribes to include leaders and respected elders. The coalition will work to recruit new members while also speaking with area churches, as well as rural folks, environmental organizations, health care and wellness organizations hoping to solicit their support. New allies, including non-Indians, who are concerned with the desecration of Bear Butte, and surrounding landscapes will be identified.

Kile said that the groups are all working for the protection of Bear Butte and the protection of all sacred sites in He Sapa. She said, "We live here, members attend local government land management meetings, the 2006 rally development is moving fast. In fact the Meade County Auditor has received Jay Allen's application for beer license and on March 7 at the regular monthly meeting Meade commissioners will set the date for hearing to approve or not approve Allen's alcohol permit request. Allen offered the concession of changing his camp/concert development name to "Sturgis County Line" after tribal and BBIA members told him how offensive his plan is to Native Americans. Approval of alcohol permitting in Meade County is contingent on two criteria, bar location and the character of the applicant.

Other individuals and groups working with the Alliance include Jace DeCory an elder who is employed at Black Hills State University. Lorraine Walking Bull, Anne White Hat and Ruth Thomas board members of Sicangu Way of Life were also participants in the Planning Summit. Carl Meyer a representative from the Mennonite Central Committee attended the meeting and took meeting notes. Bobby Black Tail Deer, Hunkpapa and Deb Wilson, BBIA members attended the Cracker Barrel held in Sturgis on Saturday and reported their experiences there. State Legislators believe the issue of buffering Bear Butte is over and done with. Kile said that there were 2-3 non-Indians at the strategy summit.

Kile further noted that she has been appointed to the Meade County Natural Resource Committee and they are writing a land use plan, the committee is an advisory board to the Meade County Commission and can make recommendations to the Meade County commissioners. At the September, 2005 Natural Resouce Committee meeting members would not endorce writing a recommendation regarding sacred site and surrounding landscape desecration concerns and suggested the BBIA go directly to the Meade County Commissioners. The Meade County Commission is worried about law suits from the rally developers, there is also concern for State Health inspector's safety when they go to inspect health standard regulations at area campgrounds. Bear Butte Creek rally development water impacts have not been studied by Meade County or South Dakota State agencies.

The next meeting of the Alliance will be on March 11 at the same location, the Extension building meeting room physical address is 1029 5th Street, directly West of the Meade County Court House that is located on West Sherman St. in Sturgis. The phone number for the Bear Butte International Alliance is 605-720-0282. Their website address is: www.matopaha.org.

Sen. Thomas Dempster, R-Minnehaha, said that "discretion" plays a large part in any work that police officers, lawyers, and states attorneys do at present and we have no problem in placing such trust in them. Opponents of the bill noted the broad application of the legislation as well as the discretionary nature of those who are charged with enforcing it. There are differing living standards and different societies which are not easy to reconcile.

Some were worried that the provisions of the bill could be extended to such things as allowing a child to ride a four wheeler without proper supervision or even neglecting to provide proper heating or cooling for a dwelling. Sen. William Napoli, R-Pennington, who proposed an amendment to the original bill said, "It is disturbing to a lot of people because we are no longer looking at a cut and dry violation of the law." Napoli then spoke of the subjective nature of law enforcement. He said, "No everyone lives on west boulevard.., or has a warm home or new clothing."

Napoli objected to the line which said, "It is a Class I misdemeanor for any parent, guardian, or custodian as defined in section 26-7A-1 to willfully deprive a child of necessary food, clothing, shelter, medical care of supervision appropriate to the child's age, if the deprivation harms or endangers the child."

He said, "I received many emails and phone calls about this section dealing with that line…, who will decide if there is adequate food, clothing and shelter. This goes way beyond reason of a reasonable society."

One legislator expressed the fact that the environment in Native American communities is different and such legislation often creates distrust between parents and the courts.

Sen. Theresa Two Bulls said, "It is Native American children being taken away…, I didn't approve of the term "willingly." Two Bulls went on to say, "It means what social services or the states attorney says."

Two Bulls also noted, "Nobody knows unless they live it and we make do with what we have."

ual council representatives."

In addition to the concern on how the project was being completed and who was doing what, the gathered representatives on Thursday listened to community members talk about the new building taking shape as a large bus garage, a potential WalMart on the reservation and a glorified steel building.

During discussions on Thursday, some of the change orders were based on a decision to cut off the third floor of the original plan and add conference room space to make the new casino more attractive to the many conferences and seminars that are regularly taken to Rapid City.

"This change really did make sense in the bigger picture," said Juanita Scherich, chair of the finance committee, "if we can attract some of that $3.5 to 4 million dollars that go to meetings in Rapid City, that would be great."

On Friday, the executive board voted unanimously to have the OST project manager, currently, Lenart Brown Eyes, and the tribal president, Cecelia Fire Thunder be the two people to sign off on any action taken on the project, in particular in the area of drawdowns and that no drawdown would take longer than ten days and that a completed design of the project be presented by the third week of March.

The original contract showed that TERO was being waived on this project; Pat Ross apologized if he had been acting out of order but expressed frustration like many others about the lack of any real information on the large project.

The economic and business development committee through its chair, Lyle Jack, agreed to withdraw as the lead committee on the project and turned it over to the finance committee.

SMSC representatives left mid-day on Friday with the sense that communication had been improved and that some of the problems had been dealt with, that there was a renewed commitment to work together on a very positive economic development venture.

Pine Ridge pulls out big road win at St. Francis

Mustangs finish strong with two century mark wins

BY TOM CRASH
Time's Correspondent

ST. FRANCIS - In what a number of people thought to be a preview of the District 14A championship game, Friday, the Thorpes went to St. Francis and came out with a 71-69 hard fought win to move their record to 16-3.

St. Francis led by one at the end of the first quarter and even though they had a 13 point lead at one time in the first half, they were leading by seven at the end of the second quarter. Pine Ridge stormed back in the third taking a 55-54 lead on the strength of Jeff Big Crow's steady shooting.

Pine Ridge won the battle of the threes, dropping in 11 to the Warriors nine. John Provost had four and 14 points before fouling out halfway through the fourth period while Jeff Big Crow hit five and finished with a game high 24 points. St. Francis had four in double figures as JJ Arcoren finished with 18, Taylor Brushbreaker had four threes and 14 points while Kris Leroy and Travis Spotted War Bonnett each had 13.

On Tuesday, District 14A opens with Pine Ridge hosting Bennett County and St. Francis hosting Little Wound, a rematch of last year's Region 7A championship game.

Little Wound tops 100 in last two games of regular season

KYLE/LOWER BRULE - Little Wound finished up their last home game of the year with a 135-45 lambasting of Bennett County on Friday and came right back with a 103-68 road win over Crow Creek.

The Mustangs celebrated the return of their sophomore point guard, Brice Hornbeck by putting eight ballplayers into double figures in the lopsided win. Opening with 28 in the first quarter, Little Wound came back with 44 points in the third and 40 in the fourth.

Devon LeBeau led all scorers with 22, Willis Zephier hit for 19, Ty Lunderman had 18, Shilo Pierce had 16, Johnny Cloud 14 off the bench, Michael Apple and Hornbeck hit for 13 each and Rich Big Boy helped with 11. Little Wound's 135 points is second to the 144 put up by St. Francis against Takini in Class A in South Dakota.

Little Wound went out early against Crow Creek on Saturday in Lower Brule going up 26-8 and finished the fourth quarter with 36 to top the century mark for the second game in a row with a 103-68 win over Crow Creek.

The Mustangs full court trapping press forced Crow Creek into 30 turnovers. Lunderman took scoring honors with 24 while LeBeau hit for 15 points and a game high eight rebounds. Hornbeck finished with 16 points and eight steals and Zephier added 10.

Even with the two late season wins, Little Wound wasn't able to overcome St. Francis in the seeding for the district tournament and travels to St. Francis on Tuesday to open defense of their District 14A title. The Custer Wildcats with coach Larry Luitjens back in the harness kept the game close with Pine Ridge on Saturday. They were down by only two at the end of three quarters but the Thorpes lit up the nets for 29 points in the fourth while holding the Wildcats to just five points for a 60-34 win in Pine Ridge.

Red Cloud finished up their regular season with a 86-45 parent's night win over Hill City and will host Hot Springs in the District 15A first round game on Tuesday.

Johnny Crow led the way with 20 points, seven steals and six rebounds as the Crusaders finished the regular season with a 14-5 record. Christian McGhee added 14 while David Giago and Lester Gotheridge chipped in 11 apiece.

Pine Ridge dominates fourth quarter for Big Foot Conference B championship

PINE RIDGE - Down by seven at the half, Red Cloud came out storming in the third quarter to take a three point lead 29-26 going into the last quarter; Roger Tyon Big Crow took control of the next six minutes running the floor with careless abandon while racking up ten of his game high 15 points to lead Pine Ridge to a 44-36 win over Red Cloud in the Big Foot Conference B Boy's tournament championship game Friday.

Big Crow ended up being named the MVP; Red Cloud's Brian Beetem earned the Mr. Offense award while Trevor Bettelyoun of Pine Ridge was named Mr. Defense.

All tourney awards were presented to Ben Red Cloud and Jon Pond/PR, Eric Kills Enemy and Brad Hussman/WK, Jon Ross and Boots Vitalis/RC, Sam Yellow Boy and Derek Tyon/WC, Orie Brown/Pine Ridge, Johnny LeBeaux.

American Horse downed Wolf Creek 46-35 for third and Wounded Knee District School got by Rockyford 55-31 for the consolation championship.

O'Neill, team defense lead Bennett County to Region 7A win and State

PIERRE - Bennett County put the pressure on early and kept it on the entire game as the Lady Warriors avenged last year's regional loss to Todd County with a 68-61 hard fought win over the Lady Falcons Monday night in Pierre for the Region 7A title and a ticket to the 2006 State A tourney set for next week in Mitchell at the Corn Palace.

Katrina Donovan, a senior forward, operating in the shadow of Abby Kratovil and Maggie O'Neill all year, opened the first quarter with two threes and a two from the corner to put Todd County in the hole right away, the Lady Falcons spent the entire game digging out of the hole. Todd County fought back and tied it up at the end of the first quarter as Kali Jenkins came off the bench for the Lady Falcons and scored five quick points.

In the second quarter, Sunni Busch drove the lane for nine points as Todd County went up 23-22 but Bennett County answered with a 10-4 run to finish the first half up 32-27 as O'Neill answered with her own nine points. Down most of the third quarter, Todd County tied it up 45 all behind two of Char Wilson's game high four three pointers only to have the Lady Warriors close out the third with a 6-0 run and a 51-45 third quarter lead as O'Neill added seven more points.

Bennett County added three more to start the fourth to make it a 9-0 run and go up 54-45 but Todd County scored seven straight to close the gap to 54-52 as Wilson hit for two more threes and Jenkins added a two. Bennett County prevailed in the end as O'Neill added three more field goals for a game high 24 points to go with 11 rebounds, four steals, two assists and two blocked shots.

Turnovers dogged the Lady Falcons throughout the game with a total of 23 and Busch went to the free throw six times in the fourth and hit one. Busch finished with 18 points, 13 rebounds, four assists, four blocked shots and two steals, Wilson tallied 12, Jenkins finished with 11 and Two Lance had 10. Todd County finished the year 18-5 and will probably look back at the year with frustration at not winning their third straight LNI championship and failing to return to state for the second year in a row after taking sixth last year in Watertown. Busch, Wilson, Two Lance, Rosebud Haukaas and Summer Folkers played their last game for Todd County.

The focus of a good deal of attention by the Todd County defense, senior Abby Kratovil completed a workmanlike game with 10 points and 12 rebounds while Donovan and Mary Jo May both helped with 10 points.

The Lady Warriors are following on the steps of the volleyball team who went to state this fall, Bennett County takes a 21-1 season record into the state tournament in Mitchell next week. Bennett County last went to the state basketball tournament in 1986 when they won the championship behind Carla Allard and Darla Hicks.

Bennett County downs Little Wound to win 14A for second year in a row, Todd County captures third straight 13A title

RAPIC CITY - "We had a good game plan for the district championship against Bennett County," said Mary Tobacco who is the head coach for the Lady Mustangs, "we wanted to play their two big girls, Abby Kratovil and Magie O'Neil tough and play a patient half court game and take the Lady Warriors out of their running game."

With that said, Kratovil and O'Neill helped Bennett County to a 15-9 first quarter lead, a lead they kept the entire game. Despite fouling out with 2:31 in the fourth, Kratovil finished with 19 points and nine rebounds, O'Neill added 16 points and 14 rebounds.

Little Wound struggled from the field all night long shooting 23 per cent in the first half. Their 18 turnovers were an improvement on the district preliminary game with Pine Ridge but 18 turnovers gave up too many opportunities to the Lady Warriors. Both Tyann Pourier and Nichelle Red Owl, excellent three point shooters, hit two between them, both from Red Owl. Sadie In The Woods finally hit some outside shots for Little Wound hitting three threes in the fourth but it wasn't enough. Sadie finished with 18 points and 11 rebounds while Julie Boyce, off the bench, hit a career high 12 points.

Bennett County's sophomore point guard, Keely Krolikowski came alive in the second half scoring 13 of her 17 points. Bennett County earned a rematch with Todd County, a team that they beat in the first game of the year and a team they lost to in last year's region championship. Bennett County downed St. Francis 71-34 in the preliminary game.

Little Wound made it into the district finals with a 58-44 win over Pine Ridge. Sadie finished with 19 points, 12 rebounds, six steals, five assists and two blocked shots. Nichelle Red Owl scored ten of her 16 points in the fourth quarter.

The Lady Mustangs finished the year with a 17 and three record and saw seniors In The Woods, Tyann and Whitney Pourier, Amanda Clifford and Julie Boyce play their last game for Little Wound.

Pine Ridge was led by Lacey Weston, a freshman, with nine points and eight rebounds. The Lady Thorpes finished the year at 12-9 and lose Deana Big Crow to graduation.

Todd County picked up their 17th win of the year with an 83-51 win over Platte as Sunni Busch hit 26 points; Kari Two Lance added 16 and Summer Folkers chipped in 11.

Earning their third straight 13A title, the Lady Falcons knocked off Winner 59-42 for their 18th win of the season. Balanced scoring was the theme of the night as both Char Wilson and Sunni Busch hit for 13 points, Kali Jenkins added 12 and Kari Two Lance chipped in 10.

Todd County finished the year at 18-5 and saw Busch, Wilson, Folkers, Two Lance and Rosebud Haukaas play their last game as a Lady Falcon.

Michaud, Her Many Horses both place sixth at State A Wrestling in Watertown

WATERTOWN - "After learning about the cracked vertebrae, we knew that wrestling in state would be chancy at best," said Dave Michaud, Pine Ridge wrestling coach, talking about his son, Bulldawg, and the results of the SD State A wrestling tourney this past weekend in Watertown, "he wrestled as many matches as the pain would allow."

Michaud opened the tourney with a pin in 5:09 of Scott Reiners of West Central then lost to the eventual 189 champ Jared Aesoph of Watertown 14-9. Bulldawg then knocked off Trevor Herman of Winner 8-1 and Kirk Bunkers of Brookings 11-1 before the pain became too much; he defaulted his final two matches and ended up sixth with a final season record of 35-5.

"We are hoping for a full recovery," said Michaud, the coach, "the doctors have told us that he needs to take a month off and then we will look at how much the swelling has gone down and if the vertebrae is healing."

Todd County's Albert Her Many Horses, a junior wrestling at 125, beat Josh LeMair from Madison in his opening match with a pin at 3:08 then lost to Ryan Baxter of Rapid City Stevens by pin in 1:10. Albert came back and beat Ted Wannenberg of Winner 3-0 and Danny Weber of Sioux Falls O'Gorman then lost to Adam Everson of Mitchell in a fall at 3:36 and lost to Brandt Wettested of Watertown 9-4 to finish in sixth place and an overall season record of 33-10.

Chris Rahn, a Todd County junior wrestling in the 275/heavyweight division lost to Joe Darrington of Brookings with a fall at 4:50 and came right back and beat Mitchell Paulsen of Custer in :58. Next up, Chris lost to Derek Gard of Canton with a fall at 2:21.

Kellie Pulliam, a senior from Pine Ridge qualified at 135 pounds but struggled with a sprained ankle from the regionals. Pulliam lost to Shawn Larsen of Sturgis in :22 and to Drake Bachmeier of Sioux Falls Washington in 2:27.

Our Views

Is the triple-tiered dependence on the federal, state and tribal system failing?

With milder temperatures upon us, things are heating up in the tribal arena also. Rumors of a lame duck council and the inevitable start of this tribe's next election has already started and listening to KILI this past month proves it.

It is never too early in the year to acknowledge the fact that many of the impediments to economic and social progress look vaguely familiar to those we saw 25 years ago when the original Lakota Times was in full swing.

We are still plagued with an astounding unemployment rate, alcoholism, poverty, drug use and the need for economic development. Society was alarmed at the prevalence of marijuana use then and now that concern has shifted to methamphetamine use, which is proving to be an elusive challenge.

The upcoming election of the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council and administration will prompt tribal members to reflect as well on the work to be done in addressing the many overwhelming problems.

By the same token, those who work in the trenches each week for the tribe will need to evaluate the work they have done.

For instance, on the Rosebud, there's a strong desire to set aside a portion of future casino profits to finance a number of profitable ventures, and that will take some vision and foresight as to the kind of projects that will be innovative and worthwhile.

The RST has picked up a modest missile defense project and is working to fund the project at a higher level in order to provide some 25-30 high tech jobs.

We cannot continue to play tug of war with each other and let politics sway our social and economic agenda. If the bottom line is job creation, many Lakota communities are failing the test.

There must be viable solutions, as many other communities bordering our lands seem to flourish okay.

There are no easy answers as we are finding out. As we look at those obstacles that plague Lakota society we need more creative and energetic ideas to spur economic development and put people to work.

In a sense, it's a 'no-brainer'. All you have to do is ask the youth. And by youth, I mean the 16 - 30 year olds. Whether or not they are active in some form of education or employment - or more sadly but true - unemployed and lacking a high school diploma or G.E.D., they are the ones hit the hardest by decisions made today by our tribal politicians.

They are the ones that know first hand what it is to grow up here and eek out a daily living.

Most already starting families of their own, realizing that they indeed are in need of a diploma or degree of some sort to support themselves and their families.

They are now asking some serious and very insightful questions and are demanding answers to those questions.

They are they ones that are inheriting the decisions made today by our elected officials.

Federal, State and lastly, Tribal politics play a decisive role in their lives more than any generation before us. They are the ones that know what it means to have no job and no where to turn.

Our unique triple-tiered existence, or should we say dependence, on this federal, state and tribal system has failed time and again. Just maybe, we could learn something from them.

Small business development has been touted as a long-term solution to unemployment and we need to see more evidence of that by tribal planners.

We are entering into a period of economic downturn and who knows how that void will be compensated for.

The problems that we saw some 60, 40 even 20 years ago are still with us and it is getting tiring for our people. Too many times have we arrived at this impasse and found ourselves lacking.

A divisive proposal

Idea to split Charles Mix County, after court ruling on Indian voting, smacks of racism

Divide Charles Mix County? Because of racism?

No.

There might be good reasons to look around our state and consider reconfiguring some of our counties - merging, taking a piece of one and adding it to another.

But racism isn't one of those good reasons.

That seems the basis, though, of petitions circulating that would divide our California-shaped county that borders Nebraska and the Missouri River.

The petitions call for taking 11 northern townships - with Platte and Geddes - and creating a new county, Hill County. The southern part - with Lake Andes, Wagner and Marty, headquarters of the Yankton Sioux Tribe - would remain as Charles Mix County.

"Basically, as far as I'm concerned (the petition) is coming out of a racist response," said Charon Asetoyer, executive director of the Native American Women's Health Education Resource Center in Lake Andes.

It's difficult to view this in any other way.

The border of the new counties would coincide with where Charles Mix borders the Yankton Sioux Reservation. And the petitions come only a few months after U.S. District Judge Lawrence Piersol ruled that the three county commissioner districts are unconstitutional because there's too large a deviation in population.

In other words, the districts effectively keep Native Americans out of the political process.

Charles Mix Commissioner Keith Mushitz says a division has been discussed for 10 years. This simply is the first time a petition has been circulated, he said.

"We've got a diverse county," Mushitz said. "It's 105 miles from the northwest corner to the southeast corner. There's just different needs at different ends of the county."

Platte Mayor John Stekly agreed there are differences.

"Our weather here is different and our ideology is different, too, from one end of the county to the other."

But split the county? Stekly said that's a stretch.

Good. There only are about 10,000 people in all of Charles Mix County, and the last thing we need now in South Dakota is to create two tiny counties. We need to be looking at consolidating our resources, not dividing them.

And for racism? Perhaps the worst reason.

Charles Mix residents understand what this is all about, even if people behind the petition - who want to remain under the radar - aren't forthcoming publicly. They know it's racism, and that's why they won't be viewed as supporters.

"All kinds of people have said they would sign it, but no one will circulate it," Platte Enterprise newspaper editor Ralph Nachtigal said of the petition.

This is a foolish endeavor that would be damaging to the county as a whole - and especially its residents.

Wouldn't it be simpler just to work together?

Things to empower yourself

Today, for the first time, I am ashamed to be South Dakotan

By Patty Pourier

I was unable to bear children because of a pituitary tumor. I love babies. I believe babies are miracles. I love children. I have four grandchildren and two more on the way. I have strong Christian morals.

I believe in abstinence of sex before marriage. I believe life is sacred. I also believe it is not okay for rape victims to carry the child of perpetrator for nine months.

Nor do I believe it is ok for a perpetrator to have any rights to a child that is conceived during a crime. I also take offense to people who judge me as non-Christian, because I believe a woman has the right to decide what happens to her body.

I was absolutely appalled when during a television interview Liz Krause, a legislator from Rapid City, said in the case of incest, over 90 percent of the time the babies are "okay" and the woman should not have the right to abortion.

I also realize the majority of our legislators in South Dakota are men. I found, after some research, the woman quoted above, has no children. The one thing I have in common with the Rapid City woman and the reset of the legislators that voted to deny all abortions, and not to offer the morning after pill to victims, is none of us have ever conceived a child from a rapist.

None of us have lost our virginity and conceived a baby from a rapist. Therefore, none of us in this group knows what it might feel to have been violated and raped in a most violent or humiliating way for hour after hour. (Most rapes happen over an agonizing six hour period.)

None of us knows what it feels like to have been held against our will and have a rapist take the most private and sacred part of our bodies and make them a criminal scene.

None of us knows how it would feel to have the result of this horrific crime grow inside of us for nine months. None of us knows how humiliating it would be, on a daily basis to look our stomachs and have the result of the crime grow inside of us.

None of us knows how shameful it would feel to be thirteen years old and to have to go to school, with everyone looking at us and our bulging stomach and say- "there she is". None of us knows the overwhelming feeling of having labor pains to bear a child from someone who has violated this sacred right of a woman, give to a woman by God.

And after the birth, none of us knows what it would feel like to hold a baby that is half you and half rapist. And furthermore, none of us know how difficult it could possibly be to decide whether or not to try to raise this child, a daily reminded of the crime and the rapist, or to make the difficult decision to give up baby.

How then, I ask, could our legislators, be allowed to make the decision to prohibit a rape victim from being offered the morning after pill, or to abort the product of a crime scene.

To me it is insane, anti-Christian and criminal for anyone to expect a victim of rape, especially the victim of incestual rape, to bear the child produced from such a crime.

This does not in any way shape or form, resemble what God intended. This is not an act of love; it is an act of control and hate. It is violation of the law of our land and God's law.

Not all victims would make the choice of the morning after pill or an abortion. But shouldn't they have the right to decide this intimate decision, and not our legislators?

Because our legislators and governor supports this, it looks as though SD will become the state that spends millions of our South Dakota tax dollars to support this law in front of the US Supreme Court.

Today, for the first time in my life, I am ashamed to be a South Dakotan.

Northern Perspectives

President Bordeaux gives update, suggests ideas

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

After listening to a KINI radio broadcast of an interview with Rosebud Sioux Tribe President Rodney M. Bordeaux by Richard Iyotte, station manager, it gave me a snapshot of the work that our relatively new administration is doing, thus far.

After having worked as a parttime writer for about a year now, I am also new at scrutinizing and studying print and broadcast media. I think such openness in broadcasting open tribal council meetings and such interviews are very helpful to the public.

They are important to my work as it is often convenient for me to work at home and carefully document what is transpiring in council. So, if someone says I wrote about a council issue and I was no where to be seen, chances are they are correct.

I work hard to keep my facts correct and unbiased as I represent a story and I appreciate any feedback about any apparent inaccuracies.

I suspect that I should thank former RST president Charles Colombe for encouraging the broadcast over KINI. I support it totally and I hope it continues.

President Bordeaux with his prior council experience appears to be getting a handle on the issues and priorities that he would like his administration to accomplish during his two years in office.

It's not an enviable position to be in as the proposed Bush administration cuts and a high unemployment rate on the Rosebud will prove some very daunting obstacles to overcome.

I thought his idea of taking a third of the annual casino budget and using it to spur economic development for RST was a great idea. Having to contend with other expenditures as clothing orders, the harsh winter and other budget shortfalls is certainly considerations that must not be ignored.

Bordeaux also spoke of the enduring encroachment of the private sector and the state and the unease, which it continues to cause on the Rosebud. The state is balking at the idea of imposing a buffer zone around Bear Butte to protect it from business development and this is angering such activists as the Defenders of the Black Hills.

The Defenders are a group that needs the help of all of us tribal members as they labor at their mission of protecting He Sapa from being desecrated and over developed. The thought of selling private tracks of public land to generate income is something that President Bordeaux and his administration.

In fairness to the state, I must say that the defeat of the legislative effort to interfere in the negotiation of gaming compacts between Lakota tribes and the Governor, showed great judgment. The potential for expanding casino locations and adding additional machines needs to be a part of any contractual relationship with the state, as Lakota people are working overtime to become self-sufficient through great economic development ventures.

President Bordeaux shares this view and it will be exciting to envision and create new initiatives and opportunities for tribal members who wish to help guide us in a different direction and away from dependence upon the federal government.

Our land base defines us as a distinct tribal people and our quasi-sovereign status is continually being assaulted, but with the good works of our new administration we will be forever vigilant in defining who the friends of the Lakota people are.

Thank you to the many Sicangu Lakota people who have extended their congratulations to me in receiving an Alumni of Color Award from Harvard University.

I will not be traveling out to Boston to receive the award because I cannot fly, but it will be conferred locally on the Rosebud. Roy Spotted War Bonnet said it should done amongst the people, anyway, so we shall see how that will be accomplished.

Truancy task force meets, attendance and intervention model reviewed

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

MISSION - The Attendance Intervention Team at the Todd County School District hosted a meeting of the Judicial/Education Collaboration Truancy Task Force at the Rosebud Casino on Feb. 22.

The intervention team is headed by Alicia Dickson-Boyd who began the meeting with a brief welcome to all participants in attendance.

Hoksila Long, a ninth grader at Todd County High School offered a Lakota prayer.

Amanda Riley and Daniel Brave were a 'big hit' at the TCSD sponsored truancy task force meeting at the Rosebud Casino. They spoke of persistent phone calls from the Alternative School that prompted them to get to class, which they appreciated.

Dickson-Boyd has led AIT since its inception and in collaborating with each of the district's 12 different schools with 14 different attendance centers. Her office has been very proactive in combating truancy in the school district as recent provisions in the No Child Left Behind legislation have targeted attendance as a major goal toward meeting the act.

ducted a power point presentation on the role of AIT, its goals and objectives, and related protocols when a student is absent from school.

The primary goals of the team are to increase average daily attendance, graduation rates, to track students and to implement and reinforce district wide strategies, which will increase student achievement.

Burnette also went over enrollment figures for the district, as well as the scheme for tracking attendance. He also described the process for tracking students who move from one to school to another and how the figures are reconciled.

Truancy is simply defined as any unexcused absence from school. All students on the Rosebud, according to the RST Tribal education code must remain in school until the age of 18 or until graduation.

The state of South Dakota requires a student to stay only until the age of 16, at present, however the legislature is discussing the idea of extending that until the age of 18.

AIT is working closely with parents, teachers, and supporting entities in finding solutions to attendance problems. Their rationale is that improved attendance can only be achieved if a student is in school, and thus improved achievement at each school will be likely be the positive end result. Dickson-Boyd said, "We are a learning organization which consistently pursues and works to maintain a balance between advocating for a positive outcome and inquiring about what needs to change."

Dexter Wittman of the Pennington County State's Attorney's Office provided an overview of the meetings held, thus far, of the truancy task force.

He said when several agencies in the Rapid City area first came together; there was much surprise at the number of people who were engaged in similar efforts in decreasing truancy rates. He was accompanied by Jim Ghents of Central High School in Rapid City, Larry Meagher of General Beadle elementary, and Jim Huff of the Learning Disability Association of South Dakota.

The minutes of the previous meeting of the task force held at the Ramkota Inn in Rapid City on Nov. 3 and 4, 2005 were passed out.

Participants indicated the truancy efforts being made in their respective schools, while listing other collaborate efforts they were engaged in. They were also asked to list the strategies that should be further explored in truancy reduction.

At that meeting AIT extended their participation at the Networking Reception providing attendance student tracking data per Infinite Campus, district wide protocols and information on building community connections.

Wayne King, head teacher at the Todd County Alternative School spoke of their work in working with some 40 students at their center. He introduced two students, Amanda Riley and Daniel Brave, who very eloquent in praising their experience at the alternative school. The fact that the school is persistent in calling students and providing a relaxed that is conducive to academic learning seemed to make a difference in their lives.

RST vice president Wayne Boyd was in attendance as was RST juvenile judge Janelle Sully.

TCSD school board members in attendance included, Marlon Leneaugh and Charlie Moe. There will several subsequent meetings upcoming of the truancy task force, in addition to a meeting in November in Pine Ridge.

OST Public Safety police captain Mills has 30 years experience

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) _ The new captain of the Oglala Sioux Tribe Department of Public Safety has 30 years of experience in law enforcement.

Patrick Mills, 53, is a tribal member who served in the Army and then returned to Red Cloud Indian School in the mid 1970s to be a coach. He said his brother, who was on the police force at the time, encouraged him to try a career in law enforcement.

``I've been with (law enforcement) ever since," Mills said.

Mills said he now has spent 30 years in the field _ the last 19 as a Bureau of Indian Affairs criminal investigator.

Mills has worked on reservations throughout South Dakota, North Dakota, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Oregon and Arizona.

He began his new job in December.

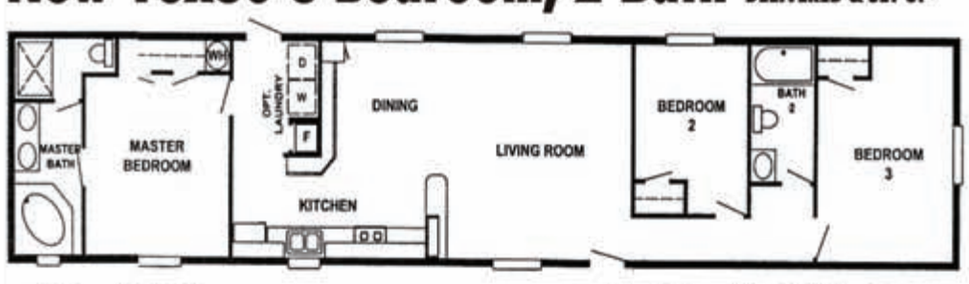
Mills said police work has evolved since his rookie years on the Pine Ridge reservation.

Television shows about crime-scene investigation give viewers a snapshot about police work but leave out how much time it takes to collect evidence, find witnesses, file reports and get test results from labs, Mills said.

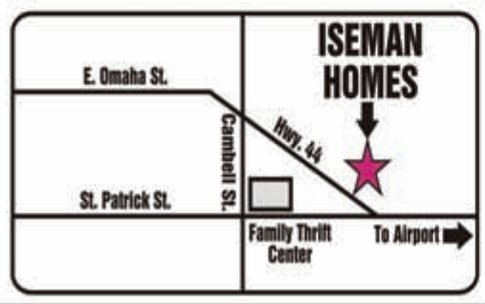
``In real life, a crime doesn't get resolved in an hour," he said.

Books aimed at educating kids about diabetes

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) _ The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Indian Health Service have announced the distribution of tens of thousands of special books aimed at educating American Indian children about diabetes.



The four-book series features a bald eagle that lives in a fictional Indian village on the outskirts of a city and counsels kids about the healthy Indian old ways, such as a diet rich in fruits and vegetables and a life filled with physical activity.



About 60,000 of the books, which were written by Native American Diabetes Project employee Georgia Perez, were distributed in New Mexico on Thursday. The rest will go to Indian children near Seattle and Minneapolis.

Diabetes has affected Indian Country at a rate two to three times the national average.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I goofed, or I am afraid that I did because I slept with my best friend. We have been friends for over a year, and he and I almost talk everyday. The things is, that I have a boyfriend, but now I don't know what to do. Help me Anna, I am afraid that I have made a horrible mistake.

Friends and now lovers

Dear Lover:

Well, it is a complication - what with your current boyfriend and all, but it is not necessarily a mistake. You and your "friend" have been flirting dangerously close to each other - and what did you think would eventually happen? You have looked forward to your daily conversations and seeing your "friend" more than you have your boyfriend.

Time to get honest, tell the old boyfriend goodbye and the new one hello. That is why it is not a good idea to marry everybody you date - it's much better to have an ex boyfriend than another ex husband. Blessings and good luck to you!

Dear Anna,

My boyfriend went away back to school this fall after a good summer together. When he first got back he called me almost every day and would drive here from Denver about once a month or so. Now he hardly ever calls and when I call him either he says he is busy and he will call me back, or he doesn't answer. What do you see?

Worried that he doesn't care

Dear Worried:

I call him a GUD. That means: geographically undesirable. Long distance relationships only work if you are Dolly Parton. Whatever you think is going on with your long distance boyfriend is going on. He is seeing others - and well, that probably doesn't make you too happy, but he lives in an entirely different world now than you do. Let him go girl. Sign up for a local boy, keep your nose to the books, graduate, go to school in California like you want to, and have a good life. This relationship you can chalk up to experience.

Dear Anna,

I am broken hearted. My auntie is in the hospital is Sioux Falls, and everyone is already making star quilts and planning for her wake, but she is still alive.

I am 14 years old and it makes me so mad to hear everyone talk and say the stuff they are saying, but how do they know she isn't going to live? When I tell them to stop they just shut up and look away. How can my family be so mean?

Niece of an alive auntie

Dear Niece:

You family members just know, that's all. It is hard on them too, but your auntie is not doing too well and the family is just gathering together. The Creator has allowed the family members good warning so that they can gather together and say their good-byes and mend any broken family fences. I know it is hard on you, but your mother and her sisters are also suffering, but they are older and know what they are dealing with. Pray for your auntie that her journey is a good one, tell her you love her, and cry for the wonderful friend that you will miss.

Dear Anna:

Do you ever work with the police to help bust drug dealers or get criminals like the psychics on television?

Wants to know

Dear Wants to know:

Very seldomly. I will help with a lost child or something of that nature, but crime I usually leave to the police and their investigative tactics. It is not smart for me to go against organized criminals. They have a way of making me leave town, and I'm not in the mood to move.

Dear Anna:

Where did my horse go? He was in the back pasture last week, but I haven't seen him for about ten days or so. Is he dead? Where is he?

Worried sick about Paint

Dear Worried:

Good news! Paint is in the neighborhood - about three or four miles from your pasture in your neighbors place. Your neighbor drives a blue and white pick up.

Stop and talk to him and go get your horse and ride him very gently home. Have a good day riding!

Dear Anna:

I almost got this job a few months ago, but there was some mix-up with the budget and now they say they can't hire anybody for a few months. If I wait will I get this job? Will they ever really hire anybody?

Waiting.

Dear Waiting:

Sometimes waiting works out. This is one of those. You have already been hired, which is what you already know, but your start date has been moved from the first part of March to the first part of April.

Enjoy your new workplace and fellow workers.

Dear Anna:

There is a big debate. Who is my father? My uncle or my father.

Thirteen and wondering

Dear Wondering:

This is touchy. Ask your mom. If she won't answer you write me again.

Good Luck!

Dear Anna:

I am caught up in this situation and I have stayed out of it…but sometimes I feel like it takes its own course. There are times that I feel helpless in doing the right thing at the right time and how will it resolve itself in the end? I don't wish to participate because I really don't want to hurt anybody or be hurt by it either. Sometimes I feel like the situation gets out of control; what do you see? Will it resolve itself?

In the middle

Dear In:

Anytime that there are two people that try and pull a third person "in" to determine who is right, there is trouble. I really feel that you can tell both parties that you ARE neutral, that you care about both points of view, and you don't want to discontinue association with anybody, or blame anybody…you just want to be okay with both of them. Refuse to play with them in this instance…an analogy: Someone wants to play ping-pong with you. They insist. They put the paddle in your hand and ask you to join them at the ping pong table. You, however, don't like ping-pong, and don't want to play. The best way not to get involved in "ping-ponging" is to hand the paddle back to the person and walk away from the table. They can then "ping" whenever they want, but you won't be there to "pong." By the way, your "friends" will eventually work out their issues, but right now they are stuck in self-righteousness, and have forgotten compassion and the other person's point of view. Good Luck with passive resistance.

That evening a wake service was held at Digmann Hall in St. Francis and the next day her body was moved to her home in Grass Mountain not far from Crow Dog's paradise where the annual sun dance is held in August. On the night of March 5, a Native American church service was held and a morning breakfast was served for those in attendance.

Dinah has three children, Frank, Ernie, and Colleen and she worked on a consultant and advisory basis with the Casey Family program.

At several points during the wakes Dinah's brother, Chief Leonard Crow Dog could be heard expressing his appreciation to those who had come to pay their respects to his sister. He said that he would be offering comment about later about efforts of some to construct a biker bar close to Bear Butte in He Sapa.

Nephew Albert Red Bear of Kyle said of Dinah's life, "She was outgoing, helping people in general and helping relatives. She gave advice to Commissioners reviewing complaints on White Clay liquor renewals

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

RUSHVILLE, NEB - Three letters of complaint were sent to the Sheridan county commissioners by residents of the county protesting the automatic liquor license renewals by three businesses in Whiteclay, Neb. who sell more than 12,000 cans of beer to Native American patrons. A hearing was held before a packed courtroom on Monday, March 6.

The county commissioners will issue a written decision on Monday, March 13 on the complaint and automatic liquor license renewal.

The protest letters were made pursuant to section 53-135.01 under the Nebraska Liquor Control Act. The complaints as listed in the letter included: (1) Law enforcement in and around the incorporated village of Whiteclay is inadequate. (2) The location of the licenses within 200 feet of the dry Pine Ridge Indian reservation fails to consider "the nature of the neighborhood or community of the location of the proposed licensed premises."

Under this Nebraska liquor law, any such letters of complaint are supposed to trigger a meeting of the local government, and in this case, it was the county commissioners since the town of Whiteclay is not incorporated. Liquor licenses are automatically issued annual during the first week of May.

According to Mark Vasina, president of Nebraskans for Peace, his organization was behind the coordinated events which had as their purpose the challenge to the automatic renewal by legal means. He noted that Russell Means, Duane Martin, Sr. and Chief Oliver Red Cloud organized a group of people who traveled from the Pine Ridge reservation. Frank LaMere was also with the group as they spoke outside prior to the meeting at 10:00 a.m. and an accompanying drum group sang.

The meeting lasted two hours and witnesses were limited to three minutes each. The composition of the courtroom was fairly mixed between

OST council approves action plan for casino

Agreement takes three hour executive session to hammer out

PINE RIDGE - "All of us want to get this casino built," said Juanita Scherich, council representative from Medicine Root and chair of the finance committee, during the special session of the council Monday in the council chambers of the Red Cloud building in Pine Ridge, "we don't need committee fighting committee and we don't need tribal council representatives as the owner's representatives on the project and if the economic and business development committee want to stay involved that is fine, they said that they wanted out of the overseeing role, it is up to them, overall it is a council project for the people."

New community center dedicated in Okreek

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

OKREEK - Community chairman, Ken Night Pipe, said the lightening strike that caused a fire on June 8, 2004 and destroyed the community center was meant to be. He said, "Out of every tragedy comes something good. It had to go to waste so that this new building could be here."

Several RST dignitaries, former elected officials and community members came together on Friday, March 3 to celebrate with the family of the late Bernice Willcuts in dedicating a beautiful new center. Antelope council representative, Robert Moore and Night Pipe served as emcees for the event which saw approximately 60 people congregate for the happy occasion.

Bernice Willcuts served on the RST tribal council from 1986-91 and left a monumental legacy as witnessed by the numerous positions, committees and commissions she served on. Former RST vice president Ike Schmidt read a biography of her accomplishments which included; tribal judge, service on the JOM board, the CHR program, and a host of other positions representing the tribe and her community, too numerous too mention.

young people and got a lot of them into the Lakota culture, the Native American church, the yuwipi or the sun dance ways. She had a busy life bringing them back into the culture. She also worked with the treaty council."

Albert's mother ,Christine, is the sister to Dinah and Leonard Crow Dog.

Over the course of the wake period, hundreds of friends and family and visitors from afar could be seen paying their respects to a highly regarded Sicangu elder whom many surely would call "A keeper of wisdom." She was often called upon by RST tribal presidents to share her wisdom or speak about the proper protocol and expectations when people congregate.

The funeral service was held at 1:00 p.m. on March 6 with Dinah's coffin carried by pickup and escorted to the Running Family cemetery by Sicangu riders on horseback. RST employees were given administrative leave if they were attending the funeral.

The spiritual leaders who officiated at the funeral service were Kirk Fool Bull, Leonard Crow Dog and Ben Black Bear, Jr. The pallbearers were listed as Allen Childs, Rueben Crow Feather, Pete Small Bear, Pierre Blue Thunder, Joe White, Edd Charging Elk, Charles Colombe, and Duane Hollow Horn Bear.

Former RST president Willie Kindle spoke of his tenure as president and said that he was fortunate enough to sit side by side with Willcuts as he begin his indoctrination into tribal politics. He said he considered Bernice an advisor and that he would consult with her from time to time.

Kindle described Bernice's insistence that tribal ordinances and law needed to be respected and adhered in her capacity as tribal judge and through her work on the judiciary committee and the police commission.

Kindle concluded by noting, "It is right that this building bears the name of Bernice Willcuts."

RST president, Rodney M. Bodeaux, Antelope councilman Moore and Okreek councilman Steve Denoyer represented RST, as Dr. Marrles Moore offered an invocation which was preceded by a brief talk. Moore said he was born a couple hundred years west of the present community center and still considered Okreek his home.

Bordeaux also described his working relationship with Willcuts and described her as someone who worked tirelessly in order to further the tribal agenda, while attending to the needs of her home community.

RST tribal secretary Geraldine Night Pipe was in attendance, as was Freda Heinert of the business office. Susan Flood Turney and her husband Wes from Chamberlain were also present and had come to pay tribute to the dedication ceremonies for her aunt.

Father Edd Witt of the Mission Catholic parish also offered a prayer, while those in attendance shared in a traditional meal including some home baked pies.

Leslie Kandaras, a liaison representing Rep. Stephanie Herseth, read a letter of congratulations to the gathering, while RST councilman Denoyer was called upon to speak prior to the ribbon cutting by Bordeaux.

Denoyer said, "It's good that we come together for something positive. Thank you to the previous community chairman and Ken Night Pipe. Thank you to the congressional people…, it was Robert Moore, Charlie Colombe and Brian Herman who paved the way to get the ball rolling. I never saw a project go as quickly as this community building. Also, to Isanti Construction. To Bernice who is my aunt. A lot of what you read, she was instrumental in doing, like the casino and law enforcement."

Moore was emphatic in explaining to the gathering that FEMA's Denver office, the state of South Dakota, the tribal council, and Ken Night Pipe were also very instrumental in collaborating on this successful effort.

Ed Harrison sang a traditional song with hand drum, while the drum group sang a couple of honor songs.

Lakota and white people. The commissioners heard the testimony and then went into executive session. Most of those in attendance were in support of the complaint.

Many Nebraskans also attended from Chadron, Scottsbluff, Lincoln and Sioux City, Iowa and many were with the Nebraskans for Peace.

Also, under Nebraska liquor laws, the governing body with jurisdiction can permit the automatic renewal of a license or require a "long form" of the application process. If the "long form" is recommended then the application must be sent to Lincoln to the liquor commission to be reviewed. In the case of Whiteclay, the county board will only decide if they want it sent on to Lincoln.

Vasina said, "We want the legal arguments to be heard at a higher level" meaning that the issue may get more scrutiny if it is sent to a body that understands the legal ramifications of endangering the public health of the nearby community of Pine Ridge. He said that liquor businesses generously sell their beer in bulk to bootleggers who transport all of it back across the state line to Pine Ridge.

According to Vasina, Andy Snyder, an attorney who represented the liquor businesses in Whiteclay said that the three stores who sold beer were under more scrutiny than other businesses. Vasina said, "In a small town, it is difficult for law enforcement to set up their operation and to capture liquor license violations."

Marguerite Vey-Miller of Chadron gave a presentation on a "skid row" study of Whiteclay which was completed by students from Chadron State College. The behavior was observed and chronicled for assessment. The town scored high as a potential skid row and the only thing missing was a plasma center where people can donate their blood.

Chief Oliver Red Cloud spoke about the fact that Whiteclay sits on the "Whiteclay Extension" which was originally a part of the boundaries of the Pine Ridge reservation. The extension was signed by President Roosevelt in1904 as an executive order and is viewed as illegal and contrary to the treaties and mandates of Congress; therefore, making current alcohol sales also illegal.

The Lincoln Star Journal published a story on Jan. 29 which documented the fact that a 50 mile "buffer zone" was created in 1880 to protect the Sioux of Pine Ridge. Its purpose was to discourage "undesirable..,white squatters" and "whisky ranches" from being located on White Clay creek. In 1904 Roosevelt failed to allow the buffer zone to revert back to the public domain and allowed an Indian school to be located there. He failed to show why the buffer zone was no longer need to protect Pine Ridge.

the council met with representatives of the Shakopee Mdewankton Sioux Community to deal with some problem areas and get the construction project back on track. Short of a council quorum on the following day, the Executive Board with Alex White Plume, vice president, Crystal Eagle Elk, treasurer and Rhonda Two Eagle, secretary passed an action plan with the understanding that it would eventually come before the full council.

The action plan approved by the Executive Board basically established the OST President and the project manager, currently Lenart Brown Eyes, as the owner's representatives with the authority and responsibility to approve all action on the construction project.

On Monday, May 6, the past council representatives overseeing the project, Walt Big Crow and Paul Little expressed an interest to remain on the project and the Economic Development Committee had met and wanted back in the mix. Council representative Big Crow asked that with all of the corruption and kickback charges being flung around just where was the documentation. Ruth Brown requested an executive session to hash this out and move forward.

"When we met with the SMSC reps last week, we were 63 days behind schedule on the construction project," said Brown Eyes, the temporary project manager, "today we are probably 70 days behind but we can get back on schedule if we get a solid action plan worked out, we should be able to finish the hotel by August 1 and the casino by Oct. 15."

After a three hour executive session, the council voted 10-6 to approve an action plan to get the project back on track with Garfield Steele/WK, Juanita Scherich/MR, Mary Poor Thunder/Lac, Will Peters/PR, Valerie Janis/Og, Kathy Janis/WK, Lyle Jack/PR, Ella John Carlow/PR, Ruth Brown/EN and Lydia Bear Killer voting for it and Bernard White Face/Porc, Austin Watkins/MR, Tom Poor Bear/EN, Paul Little/Og, Craig Dillon/Lac and Walt Big Crow/Wak voting no.

The action plan establishes the OST president and the project manager as the owner's reps, all pay apps and drawdowns are approved by owner's reps and if there is a dispute they will be reviewed by the finance committee with the process taking no longer than ten days, any changes need to be approved by the finance and economic and business development committees and the owner's representatives, a construction timeline and completion date be submitted by March 17, the OST treasurer forward all paperwork on the project to the secretary's office, drawdown requests are to be made by the 25th of each month for approval by the 26th and since this is a tribal project, TERO fees will be waived.

"Thank you council," said Lyle Jack, chair of the economic and business development committee, "I hope we are able to put all of this behind us and work together to get this important project completed."

After the special session was adjourned, Garfield Steele expressed a desire to have the construction attorney, Margaret Lineberry give a report to the council.

Hansford, supervisory special agent for the BIA's criminal investigation division, "we'll probably never see an end to it though, the drug, meth is too easy to make, too cheap to process and there is a lot of easy money to be made by selling it and it is highly addictive - we need help, we need more money to educate the youth today about he dangers and we need the community to take a stand and say no more."

The investigation was conducted by the FBI, Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, UNET, Rapid City Police Department, and the OST Department of Public Safety. Agencies assisting with the arrests that day included the U.S. Marshall's service, U.S. Forest Service, the National Guard, Dept. of Homeland Security and the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Oglala Lakota College to be iTunes University

KYLE - Last week, Oglala Lakota College was notified by the ITunes of Apple computer, that the college has been approved to be one of 150 selected nationwide colleges and universities to use their services.

ITunes is an Internet iTunes University web based site that is a free, hosted service for colleges and universities that provides easy access to educational content, including lectures and interviews 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

It's the most powerful way to manage a broad range of audio or video content and make it available quickly and easily to students, faculty, and staff. And it is the only application that supports the overwhelmingly popular iPod. It is simple and easy to use once a user downloads free the Itunes program, which makes it easy to manage, downloads of class room instruction of lectures by either audio sound or podcast. A podcast is an Internet based video which can be played on computers.

Through iTunes U, users can download content to their Macs or PCs regardless of their location. They can then listen to and view content on their Mac or PC or transfer that content to iPod for listening or viewing on the go.

According to Tony Brave, media specialist, of Oglala Lakota College, what this means for Oglala Lakota College students and faculty is that their colleges classes can be recorded by audio or podcasts (video) and be uploaded to the iTunes University website, where by password, students can download their lectures or class presentations they missed and listen or view it on their computers for later use. The computers on all the college campuses will be equipped with the proper viewing programs.

This is a plus for Oglala Lakota College as the college has a more decentralized campus and this will be beneficial to the students who can't make some classes and will able to download them for later study.

Brave said the next step will be to work with the students and instructors in helping to record classes for audio or podcasts.

Brave said the college had in place the infrastructure of being an iTunes U already because of their television production courses they offer. Most of the equipment needed is already in place, so in reality it isn't going to cost the college said Brave.

Our Lady of Lourdes uses third quarter run to break open Big Foot Conference A Boys championship game

BY TOM CRASH
Time's Correspondent

Our Lady of Lourdes set a goal last summer to come home with the 2006 Big Foot Conference championship, Saturday they knocked off American Horse 74-59 to win it, the Chiefs had beat them twice during the year. The OLL Braves include Shane Clifford(head coach), Carl Swallow, Kiley Weston, Brier Iron Cloud, Colby Weston, Dwight Kelly, JD Plume, Truman Rossman and Scott Weston(assistant coach); Photo courtesy of Sandy Cuny.

BATESLAND - Our Lady of Lourdes broke open a close game by storming out of the chute in the third quarter outscoring American Horse 28-10 and cruising to the 2006 Big Foot Conference championship 74-59 in Batesland on Saturday.

Brier Iron Cloud, an OLL eighth grader, led the charge with 18 of his game high 38 points in the wild and wooley third quarter. Oren Three Stars kept American Horse in the game hitting 16 of his team high 27 points in the first half, the Chiefs were down 38-31 at the half.

American Horse entered the game on Saturday with a 19-1 record that included two wins over OLL, a two point overtime win at the Red Cloud tournament and a four point win in Allen. Red Cloud gave the Chiefs their only setback until Saturday. OLL was 10-3 with the two American Horse losses and an overtime loss to Red Cloud in the Gordon tourney.

American Horse took the initial lead on a drive by Three Stars, OLL came right back on a Kiley Weston lay up to tie it up. Three stars drove the basket again for the last lead the Chiefs would have on Saturday. Carl Swallow tied up the game at four and JD Plume hit two straight, a three from the corner and a two on a short jumper on the baseline to give OLL a 9-4 lead. Three Stars scored ten points in the first quarter to hold American Horse close, down 21-16 at the first quarter mark.

After the third quarter explosion the Braves held a 66-41 lead and cruised to their 11th win of the season, the one they had set their sights on last summer and worked hard to attain through the fall and winter. In addition to his 38 points, Iron Cloud grabbed 11 rebounds with one blocked shot and one assist. Swallow made it a double double with 12 points and 10 rebounds, Kiley finished with 11 points, seven boards, five assists and three steals, Plume helped with nine points, five steals and four rebounds.

Three Stars added five steals and a couple of rebounds to his 27 points; Eugene DuBray chipped in 11 points and five rebounds off the bench and Geddy Pack hit for 11 points and grabbed six boards. David Red Bear chipped in 11 rebounds and four points.

Loneman knocked off Porcupine for third place as Dallas Two Lance led the way with 30 points and Johnny Yellow Cloud added 16; Derek Marshall led Porcupine with 14 and Casey Marshall helped with 10.

Red Cloud used a balanced scoring attack to get by Batesland 67-38 for the consolation championship. Dustin Brewer led the Crusaders with 14, Mike Ridhards and Jacey Twiss helped with 12 a piece and Montana Sierra added 10. Jordan High Horse and Wayne Mobley both hit for 14 points to lead Batesland.

Conference all tourneys included: Carl Swallow and Kiley Weston/OLL, Eugene DuBray and Sam Yellow Hawk/AH, Johnny Yellow Cloud and Ernest Long Visitor/Loneman, Casey Marshall and Daelan Black Bull/Porcupine, Jacey Twiss and Montana Sierra/RC, D. Quintana/Bates, Jeremy Blacksmith/PR, Enoch Yellow Hawk/LW, Allen Janis/RF, Monte Good Voice Flute/WC and Henry C./WKDS.

Team sportsmanship went to Rockyford Raiders, the cheerleading award to Wolf Creek School, Mr. Hustle to James Pine of Pine Ridge, Mr. Defense to Carl Swallow of OLL and the Mr. Offense and MVP to Brier Iron Cloud of OLL.

The family of Jared Red Cloud, a ballplayer and graduate of Batesland School who passed away in a car wreck the summer after he graduated, honored several student athletes after the championship game. Brier Iron Cloud of OLL was honored as Mr. Big Foot Conference, Dallas Two Lance of Loneman was selected for the Playmaker award and Oren Three Stars Down of American Horse was chosen for th eSpirit of Jared Red Cloud award.

Tourney problems bring school representatives together to plan for the future

RED CLOUD - Representatives from all 11 Big Foot Conference schools attended a meeting on Monday at Red Cloud School to address an escalating set of problems that are threatening the future of the conference and questioning the value of end of the year tournaments.

"We have to do something," said Travis Benson, conference president and athletic director at Our Lady of Lourdes in Porcupine, "the problems are getting worse, disrespect, a growing lack of sportsmanship and little of no positive leadership from the adult fans that attend the events."

The conference has a membership of 11 middle schools and works to provide a structure for competition during a regular season and a post season tourney in cross country, flag football, girl's volleyball, girl's and boy's basketball, track and co-ed softball. Schools involved include: Loneman, Red Cloud, Wolf Creek, Batesland, Rockyford, Porcupine, OLL, Pine Ridge, American Horse, Wounded Knee District School and Little Wound, Crazy Horse dropped out last year.

Problems coming up during the B in Pine Ridge and the A in Batesland include two schools removed from the B for playing overage players, and in the A players using foul language against officials, coaches pushing officials, objects thrown at officials, trash talking among the players competing, fans abusing the officials, fans having to be removed from the gym, a player attacking a coach, locker rooms trashed by a losing team and a general loss of sportsmanship.

"We were hoping for more administrators to attend the meeting," said Benson, "we need to deal with the issues at hand, put a structure in place, look at all of the rules and put together rules that we can and will enforce to make for a better environment to compete in both during the regular season and during the end of the year tournaments."

Another meeting is planned at the end of March and a third meeting in April to set the revised rules in place.

Williston State closes season with two home wins, looks to regions

WILLISTON, N.Dak. - Using their inside outside game to the hilt, Williston State Lady Tetons closed out their regular season with home wins against Bismarck State 75-47 on Wednesday and on Monday 89-38 against Dawson Community College.

Laura Big Crow opened the second half with eight straight points on the way to a game high 28 points to go with 12 rebounds and four blocked shots. Williston hit 11 threes in the game as Kayla Berenthsen and Jamie Wheeler both hit for four each and Lacy Heier had three.

Playing only a little over 15 minutes on Monday night against Dawson Community College, it was enough time for Big Crow to get team highs of 18 points, eight rebounds and two blocked shots as the Lady Tetons went out quickly to a 42-19 halftime lead and a 89-38 win.

Williston State finished the regular season 23-6 and second in the Mon-Dak Conference to Lake Region State College. The Lady Tetons will host a four team Region 13 tournament playing Iowa Western at 6pm on Mar. 11th. Lake Region will play North Dakota State College of Science in the second game. The winners play on the 12th and the regional winner earns a berth in the national tournament.

Big Crow has led the Lady Tetons in both scoring and rebounding this year after having led the team in scoring and was second in rebounding coming off the bench last year. Big Crow is getting a good deal of interest from colleges and universities from as far away as Georgia for the next two years.

People's right to know

Good sportsmanship is important to our kids

The people's right to know is supported by the first amendment of the U.S. Constitution. It allows for freedom of the press, free speech, the right to lawfully assemble and the right to a grievance. It is an important clause as it points out the complimentary function of the media to do its job and keep the people informed.

The First Amendment was interpreted to mean that we as citizens and we as an avenue of information all share in the responsibility to communicate with each other the important issues which directly or indirectly affect us as individuals and communities in general.

It is not only our job as journalists, but our responsibility to dig deep into the fray when answers to serious question prove elusive.

When questions arise and the players involved "Take the Fifth," which by the way is also guaranteed by the Constitution, flags go up as to why. So you know the old saying, "Don't kill the messenger." It's ringing true more often than not lately.

In a recent study at one university, many college students did not know what the first amendment provided for and that may be a sad commentary on individual freedoms.

The border towns of Chadron and Whiteclay, Neb. are in the headlines as communication between the Oglala Sioux Tribe and the Chadron city council is prompting discussion about civil rights, racism and eliminating points of conflict. In Whiteclay, the march on the town Monday, March 6 is drawing renewed attention to the fact some liquor businesses may be getting their licenses automatically renewed without a public hearing.

The Lakota Country Times is working to fulfill its mission of keeping Lakota people informed of recent developments that are impacting us on a daily basis.

We highly encourage you to continue to tell your story and let us transmit it to our tribal membership and Lakota readership.

We work in a very sincere manner to keep your trust as we tell your story in an objective and non-prejudicial way so that you can make up your own mind about the events.

There are so many stories out there that can be told. We have to publish it or video it ourselves for our families, our children and our communities.

We are roles models and need to act like it

Recently there has been issues revolving around the talk of violence that includes tribal politics, fans and parents actions with poor sportsmanship at school events.

Our children see these actions, they hear them, and the copy them.

It all starts in the home, we have to teach uonihan or being respectful. We can talk it, preach it, write it but we need to practice it.

Things to empower yourself

A strong person has strength that comes from within

By Patty Pourier

I ran into Charlie Colome the other day in Big Bat's. I always enjoy hearing what he has to say. He has been everything from a rodeo cowboy to a successful businessman, from a rancher to the President of the Rosebud Tribe. He is witty and wise.

A one liner that he shared with me he had used during his administration as tribal chairman was "Trying to making me look bad does not necessarily make you look good." This gave me some food for thought.

I believe in synchronicity. The sermon at church that very Sunday kind of fell in line with Charlie's quote.

Our preacher asked the following questions:

Are you who you want to be? How do you live you life? Are your actions reflective of your emotions or of your spiritual beliefs? Is your word your word? Do you uplift or tear down with your words? Do you deal with dignity? Do you allow others their dignity or do you try to steal it from them with your words and actions? Are you vulnerable or vengeful? Do your actions foster peace or anger?

How do you deal with your enemies? Love is not a feeling, but an action. Can the people you love tell you love them by your actions? Does your mouth fume from vulgarity and profanity or do words of healing and love flow like a river to quench the thirst we have for acceptance?

Do the people you love know you love them? Do you edify or deny dignity to others? When you are angry, do you degrade the person you are angry with, or do you love your enemies?

A strong person has strength that comes from within, not from physical strength. Mother Theresa was one of the strongest people to have lived in this past century, and yet she was slight in stature.

When I do make mistakes, do I say a passing "I am sorry", or do my actions and words show the sincerity of my apology and acknowledgment of wrongdoing?

Another thing that Charlie shared with us that day was a 2 paged, type written letter he had received, and at the bottom of the second page was written, this would have been shorter, had I more time.

So I will end this article here with a quote from The Message Bible Matthew 5, 33-48:

Love Your Enemies

38"Here's another old saying that deserves a second look: "Eye for eye, tooth for tooth.' 39 Is that going to get us anywhere? Here's what I propose: "Don't hit back at all.' If someone strikes you, stand there and take it…. 42 No more tit-for-tat stuff. Live generously.

43"You're familiar with the old written law, "Love your friend,' and its unwritten companion, "Hate your enemy.'

44 I'm challenging that. I'm telling you to love your enemies. Let them bring out the best in you, not the worst. When someone gives you a hard time, respond with the energies of prayer,

45 for then you are working out of your true selves, your God-created selves. This is what God does. He gives his best--the sun to warm and the rain to nourish--to everyone, regardless: the good and bad, the nice and nasty.

46 If all you do is love the lovable, do you expect a bonus? Anybody can do that. 47 If you simply say hello to those who greet you, do you expect a medal? Any run-of-the-mill sinner does that.

48"In a word, what I'm saying is, Grow up. You're kingdom subjects. Now live like it. Live out your God-created identity. Live generously and graciously toward others, the way God lives toward you.

SD Task Force on abortion may end up hurting women who want to continue pregnancies full term

By Charon Asetoyer
Executive Director
Native American Women's Health Education Resource Center

In December the South Dakota Task Force to Study Abortion issued its majority report. As many now know, the task force members recommended a full ban on all abortions, explicitly rejecting a proposal by the Task Force's pro-life chair that would allow exceptions for rape, incest, and the life of the mother. What many people do not appreciate is an even more far reaching and dangerous recommendation that will affect all pregnant women and undermine both maternal and fetal health.

The Taskforce also urged the state to amend it's Constitution "to include provisions that provide the unborn child, from the moment of conception, with the same protection of the law that the child receives after birth . . ." This recommendation has already been acted upon by state legislators as Joint Resolution 2, to amend the South Dakota constitution.

The argument that unborn children have full legal rights - independent of and hostile to the pregnant woman's - has been used repeatedly to undermine both maternal and fetal health. In the name of such fetal/unborn rights, pregnant women have been subjected to unnecessary surgery, forcibly restrained, and denied the ability to make health care decisions for themselves and their children.

For example, in 2005, a self-described true believer in the Bible went to a Pennsylvania hospital to deliver her seventh wanted child. The hospital decided she needed a C-section and when she refused went to court using the argument recommended by the South Dakota legislature - that the fetus had full, separate constitutional rights. The hospital won. The court gave the hospital custody of the fetus before, during and after delivery and the right to take custody of the pregnant woman to force her to undergo surgery. In the end, she and her husband fled the hospital and delivered a perfectly health baby without surgery.

Angela Carder was not as lucky. At 27 years old and 25 weeks pregnant she became critically ill. She, her family and her attending physicians all agreed on treatment designed to keep her alive for as long as possible. The hospital however called an emergency hearing to determine the rights of the fetus. Despite testimony that a Cesarean section could kill Ms. Carder, the court ordered the surgery because the fetus had independent legal rights. The surgery resulted in the death of both Angela and her fetus.

Ayesha Madyun was forced to have a C-section based on the claim that she had been in labor too long and that her baby was at risk of dying from an infection. Her request to be allowed to wait longer before having the surgery so she could try natural delivery was portrayed to the court as an irrational religious objection to surgery. The court granted the order. After Madyun had been forcibly cut open, they found that there was in fact no infection.

Why would the South Dakota Task Force want these things to happen to the pregnant women of South Dakota? Neither women nor children would be protected by the existence of special fetal rights that make women flee from hospitals and subjects them and their unborn children to unnecessary surgery. In fact, leading medical groups and appellate courts have found such interventions to be unconstitutional.

In a free society it should be possible to value potential life as matter of religious belief, emotional conviction or personal experience without creating new and special fetal rights that in fact undermine maternal health and rights. The South Dakota Task Force was offered many positive suggestions for enhancing the interests of all pregnant women, including those who want to continue to term. It is a shame that the Task Force chose instead to use the hearings as a platform for the most radical positions opposing abortion and as a basis for recommendations that would make pregnant women who continue to term vulnerable to new, dangerous and counterproductive state interventions.

We honor the language and each other

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

When we meet and there is an introduction and greetings are exchanged in Lakota, I believe that we honor the language and each other.

I have been so very fortunate as a student of the Lakota language. My personal intent has been to combine with what I learned as a youngster with what I have observed as an adult. I am fascinated with what I call the "politics of language" as it applies to the Lakota language. I am far from being a linguist, but I am sure that some wasicu language professor has studied the things I have seen from appreciating the language and hearing it first hand.

I know that language has power and Lakota demonstrates that to the maximum. I spoke with Francis White Bird today and he explained that a word like inipi is just one example of just how complex and beautiful the language is. As you break it down into three syllables, it literally translates to breath, life and the pi is the plural form of the word.

Learning any language means being able to think quickly on your feet, especially Lakota. It is such a complex language that when you study it in depth, you just know that Lakota people from the beginning of time were extremely intelligent. Francis further explained another word that describes the Sicangu oyate and places us in relation to the Kul Wicasa or Lower Brule Sioux. It is an explanation, that I have not heard and I will need to re-visit that word with him soon.

Finally, Francis said that there is a lot of combining English with Lakota to make contemporary words and it simply is not right. For example, some will use a Lakota word and add an 's' to it to try to make it plural and it takes on an English form. That is incorrect as Lakota is made singular or plural by actually describing whether there is one or many people involved in the event taking place.

I don't mean to over emphasize the value of Lakota, but as I get older and am treated with increasing respect among Lakota people, I realize that what many possess in terms of their language and culture is so very unique and priceless.

As a very conscientious student of Lakota, I have gotten more compliments and positive reinforcement for trying to put it out there for all to see. I see the language very much alive and viable and we need to pass on to the younger Lakota and we can do that.

Every writer and educator loves to see their name listed as the author in any form of publication and I am the same. I have greatly enjoyed writing about Lakota people and will continue to do so. It helps me to be a good tribal citizen and to see what is happening with the social and moral fabric of our people.

Watohansna inagna woglaka masipi ca he lila wopila heca. Lehan Lakota eya hunhiya unspimicic-eye ca anpetu wanji upiyake woaglakinte ca anagoptanpo.

A column for and about women veterans

Some Veterans may strive for order in their homes because other areas in their life seem to be spinning out of control

Dear SAS: I have been out of the Army for a couple of years. One thing I learned in the Army was to keep things orderly. I have my own place which is a house on my father's land.

Recently my boyfriend moved in to live with me but he is beginning to complain about how I keep my house. He calls me a neat freak and I think he's a slob. He was not in the military and doesn't seem to understand the importance of things being kept in their place. This is beginning to hurt our relationship. How can I make him understand?

Dear Reader: It is difficult for those who were not in the military to understand the level of orderliness that was a required part of the duty. Many individuals, even those who kept things tidy all the time, had quite an awakening when they started basic training.

Keeping one's gear and physical environment in order reached new levels, and it was a part of the discipline expected of a good soldier. Many veterans report that they couldn't wait to get out of the military so that they wouldn't have to abide by such strict rules.

The interesting thing is that even though they had this freedom as a civilian it wasn't long before they found themselves keeping things neat and tidy anyway just as a course of habit.

Some veterans become obsessive about keeping their home in order and they develop rigid expectations that others find difficult to meet. Spouses/partners of veterans have reported that even one dirty dish in the sink was unacceptable in their home.
This is an unrealistic expectation and is an example of obsessive thinking regarding keeping a home neat and in order.

In some cases a veteran may strive for order in their home because other areas in their life seem to be spinning out of control. For example, a person who can't get a job, is having difficulty with finances, has legal problems, and disagreements with family members might turn to their home as the one area in their life over which they feel they have some control.

Regardless, many relationships suffer because of this issue. Both individuals in a relationship need to sit down and talk about the problem. Generally it involves a negotiation between the two to form an agreement about household responsibility. For example, he may need to pick up after himself more and you might discover that the dishes can wait if there are other things that need your attention. If it becomes too difficult to come to an agreement by yourselves, getting a counselor to help you is a good idea. The counselor can listen to both of you and offer an objective opinion about your needs.

Dear SAS: My aunt is a veteran and she has been giving me advice. I just got out of the military two months ago and am busy getting my life together after being deployed overseas.

She has been telling me I need to get enrolled with the VA. Right now I don't feel I have the time to do this and I don't need any medical care. I tell her there's no hurry but she wants me to do it right away. Is she right?

Dear Reader: Enrollment with the VA is a good idea. The process is not difficult and does not require a lot of time. What your aunt may realize is that even though you may not feel a need to seek care right now, it is hard to predict what can happen in the future.

Some medical problems can arise later that will be directly related to your military service. For some veterans, problems with living may develop. These problems might be more easily resolved with help from a counselor.

Veterans are a unique group and the VA provides expertise in treatment that is not necessarily found in the civilian sector. Veterans who served in Iraq or Afghanistan are eligible for free services within two years of discharge. There are other benefits associated with being enrolled with the VA.

You can contact the nearest VA facility, or your county Veterans Service Officer, to help you get enrolled and to give you more information.

Notes From Indian Country

The basketball miracle of 1936

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

One of those rare, sports miracles happened in South Dakota 70 years ago.

It all came about when the State decided to create a new basketball class for smaller schools. The Class "B" designation became a reality in 1936 and the first playoffs for the state title ensued.

On the Pine Ridge Reservation in Western South Dakota a group of Lakota boys attending Oglala Community School at Pine Ridge Village played a version of basketball that evolved around a sound defense. Their aggressive style of defense came from the hours of playing basketball in the school gym. Many of the boys were boarders at the school and, in fact, the school itself was often referred to as "The Boarding School."

The boys, in actuality, grew up together. They started to play one-on-one basketball from the time they were able to cradle a basketball and gain the strength to shoot it at the baskets that appeared to be 80 feet in the air to them. Every recess and every evening after school saw the boys shooting baskets and learning to guard the boy dribbling the basketball.

The object of their game was to keep the boy with the ball from getting off a shot or getting under the basket. In later years this aggressive style would cost future Indian teams many close games.

The local daily newspaper was critical of the Oglala boys for having a poor defense. So how good was their defense? In their championship run they held Belle Fourche to 27 points, Tyndall to 33 points, Harrisburg to 33 points and in the State "B" Championship game they held Bridgewater to just 22 points.

Sterling "Chicken" Big Bear and Dave Brewer made the All-State Team that year. And although many of my readers will not know the other members of the team, they also deserve to be named. They were Walter "Hank" Means, who later became the father of the Indian activist and actor Russell Means, Irving "Boob" Jumping Eagle, Lawrence "Prunes" Ecoffey, Francis "Jacks" Brewer, and Raymond Chief. They are all now deceased. Oh yes, and Dave Brewer became my father-in-law and the grandfather of my daughter Marie and son Tim.

It is remarkable that a team of Lakota boys from a very small school on an Indian reservation managed to win the first State "B" Championship ever in the history of South Dakota basketball. In 1981, at half-time of the State "B" Tournament held in Rapid City that year, the surviving members of that championship were honored.

It would be many years before another Indian team won any state basketball championship in South Dakota again. Much of it had to do with the tight defenses the Indian teams used and their rapid fire, up and down the court in a flash style of play. The Indian teams usually drew two to three times the number of fouls in a game as their non-Indian opponents and in close games this made the difference.

Many of the diehard basketball fans from the nine Indian reservations in the state still believe that the referees discriminate against their teams but I believe that kind of thinking is common throughout America.

Seventy years later Oglala Community School is now Pine Ridge High School and their mascot has been changed from the "Indians" to the "Thorpes." But they are still the favorite of so many people living on this huge Indian reservation and their fans are as rowdy as ever and they still pack the gymnasiums on game nights.

What that team of young Lakota boys accomplished in 1936 was unprecedented. Most of them had never even traveled very far off of the reservation and in advancing to the championship game held at the Corn Palace in Mitchell, SD, they had to travel to a place they had never been and to a gym that to them was located in a foreign country.

Dave Brewer recalled the many insults hurled at them by the predominantly white fans at the games and he believed that the further they advanced to the finals, the worse the insults became. In later years "Hank" Means talked about the debris tossed at them as they entered the arena to the catcalls of "Redskin" and "Dirty Indian."

Is it any wonder that his son Russell became a powerful advocate for Indian rights.

If the Oglala Community School players of 1936 were still alive I think they would feel something like kinship to the five black starters of Texas Western University as it advanced to win the National Collegiate Athletic Association championship in 1966. Like this Texas team that faced several all-white teams that had never played against an all-black team, the all-Indian team of OCS played against white teams that had never played against an all-Indian team.

That they persevered to win the State "B" Championship at a time when Indians faced the worst discrimination in South Dakota's history was indeed miraculous.

SPEARFISH - Red Cloud held a close 13-12 lead after the first quarter but couldn't buy a basket in the second going down 18-13 at the half before coming out with guns ablazing and a full court pressure defense to run off 14 unanswered points to start the third and finish with a 50-40 District 15A championship win.

"We let Custer determine the tempo of the game in the first half," said Matt Rama, Red Cloud coach, "I let them know at the half that we had to play our style of up-tempo game and pressure defense if we wanted to get back in the game."

Billy Scott scored 11 of his 12 points in the second half including five of six from the free throw line and Johnny Crow hit nine of his team high 14 points in the fourth to lead the Crusaders who picked up their 16th win of the season against five losses.

Custer was led by Trevor Cook who hit for 18 and Isaac Parsons who chipped in 10 on Friday night in a game played at the Young Center, on the campus of Black Hills State University in Spearfish.

Red Cloud downed Hot Springs 73-49 on Tuesday on their home floor to get to the district championship. Red Cloud went up strong 20-11 after one and held the Bison to six points in the second to go up 39-17 at the half. David Giago got a season high four threes and 22 points and Lester Gotheridge added 11 points.

Custer squeaked by Hill City 46-45 to get past the preliminary round.

Mustangs repeat as 14A champs with 72-43 win over Pine Ridge

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Little Wound rolled into the 14A championship game on Saturday with the momentum of three straight 100 point games while Pine Ridge had won 11 straight games and had three wins over Little Wound to their credit this year. The Mustangs continued to roll as they opened the game with a 14-0 run and never looked back as they knocked off Pine Ridge 72-43 to win the 14A championship for the second year in a row over the Thorpes.

Ty Lunderman hit a couple of close in shots, Devon Lebeau hit two threes while Michael Apple and Brice Hornbeck helped with a couple of field goals and that quick Little Wound was up 14-0. Ryan Pourier hit two baskets and Jeff Big Crow sank two free throws to keep Pine Ridge from being shutout in the first quarter. Six players for Little Wound scored in the second quarter as LeBeau hit a third three and the Mustangs go up 30-14 at the half; John Provost scored six of his 14 points in the second period for Pine Ridge.

Once again the 14A championship game was played in Rapid City at Stevens High school; 3,500 fans, many decked out in either blue and gold or red, white and black of Pine Ridge proved once again that the game has outgrown any venue on Pine Ridge Reservation.

"We just did a good job of moving the ball around and finding the open man," said Jamie Feather Earring, in his first year as Little Wound head coach, "our players played very unselfish and they stepped up on defense and kept the pressure on Pine Ridge all night long."

Pine Ridge cut the deficit to 11, 51-40 in the third quarter but that was as close as they would get as Little Wound outscored the Thorpes 25-12 down the stretch and cruised to a 29 point win.

Michael Apple led the way for the Mustangs with 14 points, Shilo Pierce and Rich Big Boy helped with 13 each off the bench and LeBeau chipped in 12. Brice Hornbeck, Little Wound's sophomore point guard, missed two weeks of the season with tendonitis in his shoulder but has come back with a vengeance, he tallied only four points but pulled down 11 rebounds, finished with six steals, four assists and two blocked shots.

Ryan Pourier, playing in his fourth straight district championship, provided a steady hand for the Thorpes with 19 points and five rebounds. Provost with 14 points was the only other Thorpe in double figures as Pine Ridge struggled to get their shots to fall. Pine Ridge put up 31 three point attempts and hit seven and overall from the field on Saturday took 56 shots hitting 15.

On Tuesday, Little Wound travels to Pierre for the Region 7A championship against Platte, a team they beat 99-74 in the Snowball Classic in December in Winner; the team that comes out on top goes to the State A tournament in Sioux Falls March 16-18 at the arena.

Little Wound earned the trip to the District 14A championship game by knocking off St. Francis on the road on Tuesday, 101-71, their third straight game topping the century mark.

The Mustangs hit the floor running and built a 19-13 first quarter lead by closing out the quarter with a 7-0 run against the defending 13A and region 7A champs. Devon LeBeau hit three of his four threes in the second quarter to help Little Wound total 31 points for the quarter and a 50-26 lead The Mustangs kicked back in the third and led 68-46 only to finish the game off with 33 points in the fourth for the road win.

LeBeau finished with 18 points and eight rebounds, Willis Zephier led the way with 22 points, six assists, five rebounds and four steals, Hornbeck helped with 15 points, eight boards and five steals, Ty Lunderman added 15, Rich Big Boy hit for 10 while Michael Apple chipped in nine points and eight rebounds.

St. Francis was led by JJ Arcoren's 22 points; he was helped by Kris Leroy's 15, Travis Spotted War Bonnet's 13 and Royce Forte's 10.

Habitat for Humanity creates partnerships

Charging Hawk family moves into new home

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

MISSION - The need for housing on the Rosebud reservation is rather acute, but with a little prayer and some "sweat equity" Harold and Stacy Charging Hawk are now fully moved into their new Habitat for Humanity home on the north edge of town.

Habitat for Humanity is a national Christian affiliated organization that operates on an independent basis, locally, with its own board of directors and which is comprised of a good cross section of talented people from the community and representing several businesses. The local affiliate is called "Sicangu Tikaga Okiciyapi" and it has been operational on the Rosebud for six years.

Habitat as a housing ministry has built over 150,000 houses worldwide for more than 750,000 people. Families who qualify must contribute "sweat equity" amounting to 500 hours. The program is a not a giveaway and families are not charged any interest on their mortgage which can be as long as 30 years. There is no profit margin for Habitat and the mortgage that is paid in each month is utilized by Sicangu Tikaga Okiciyapi locally for financing future projects.

The mission of the local Habitat is, "To partner with low income families, building simple, decent, affordable homes. In partnering with families, we not only construct a home, but offer training and education in budgeting, finance and home maintenance. Our goal is to insure the partner family is a successful homeowner."

The Executive Director is Doris Cardwell who has extensive experience in non-profit organizations. She originally arrived on the Rosebud with her family to teach bible school and ended up being passionate about fulfilling the housing needs of local families. She explained that families must meet three

National women & girls HIV/AIDS awareness day

Challenge is public awareness on the facts

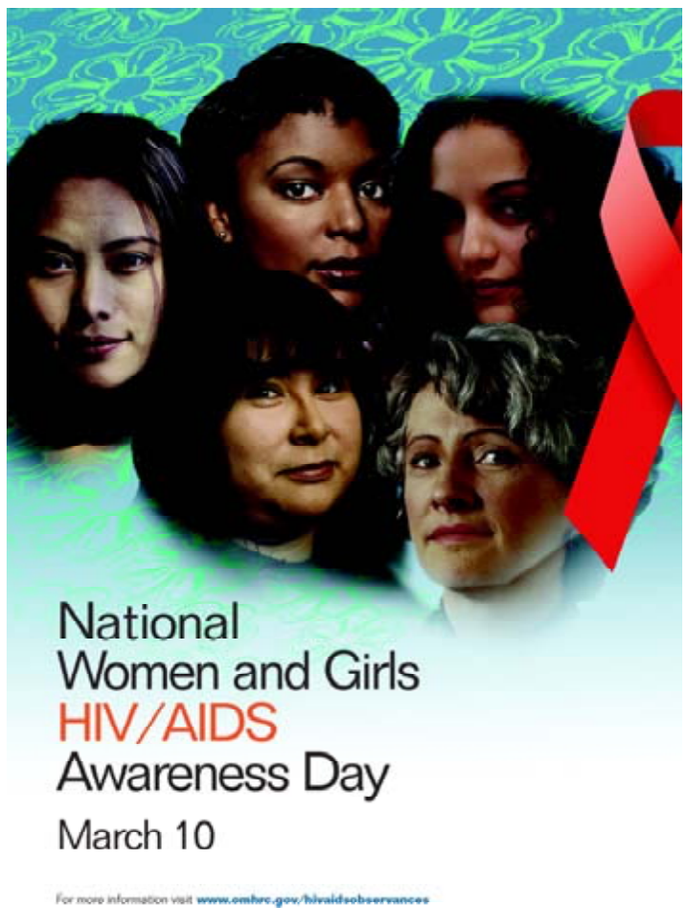
BY ANDREW CATT-IRON SHELL
Special to the Times

March 10 marks the first annual National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day.

Acknowledging the risk to women and girls is very fitting when speaking to this preventable disease within American Indian communities.

This day, hosted by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services is set to raise awareness on the increasing impact of HIV/AIDS transmission on women and girls.

In 2005, women represented 30 percent of new HIV infections in the United States.



These national statistics highlight that many of these newly infected are young women and girls and most are members of minority communities. The majority of our vibrant American Indian population in South Dakota are female. In South Dakota, American Indians account for 9 percent of the overall State population while accounting for 15 percent of all known HIV/AIDS infections.

In 2002, American Indians in the Crazy Horse Monument State accounted for 46 percent of reported chlamydeous cases and 48 percent of gonorrhea cases. Sexually transmitted disease criteria in order to be considered for housing. The criteria are a need for housing, ability to pay, and a willingness to partner.

Cardwell said, "It was Amos Prue and Kernit Grimshaw who provided the idea for SWA and our leadership to talk about how to partner in building the first two houses under collaborations in 2004." She pointed out that Wells Fargo Housing Foundation has been instrumental in providing housing grants and volunteers. They do not charge any interest or make any profit in the grants they provide. Since the two home collaboration in 2004, the effort has expanded to include Sinte Gleska University's Vocational Trades Department and the Sicangu Nation Employment and Training Program. The year 2005 produced five homes through this joint effort with more being planned for 2006. Rosebud Episcopal Mission is also a partner organization in renting space to Habitat to build the homes, which are then moved to sites across Todd and Mellette Counties.

The late Frank Gangone was instrumental in envisioning the work of Habitat here and completed the affiliation process that would clear the way for their work.

Harold Charging Hawk said that qualifying for a Habitat home was the answer to his prayers. He often entertained the volunteers with his music and also told them the history and culture of the Rosebud. He said, "It's really satisfying and we have come to enjoy it. The location is great and I am thankful to Joel and Doris. I want to thank all of the volunteers. I want to also thank my brother, Richard, and my son, Joseph."

Stacy Charging Hawk said, "Last year they advertised as to where to apply.., when I applied I felt good in my heart. I felt like we had as good a chance as anyone. We prayed before and after." Stacy says she feels the process has been a rather personal experience, as her and Harold have been closely involved with the many volunteers who have worked on their home. She said she enjoyed meeting each one personally, cooking for them, and also working with them on fulfilling the "sweat equity."

She also said, "Harold started out mowing and I would cook for the people. He also sponsoreda t-ball tournament as a fund raiser and that was fun."

Sicangu Tikaga Okiciyapi is a great example of an agency making a dent in the housing needs of the Rosebud reservation and such work has demonstrated its rightful place as a positive approach to teaching responsibility and partnerships.

On March 3 and 4, Andrew Cottier took a basketball team to the YMCA to play in a tournament. The boys seemed to be excited and ready to play. Team players included Ernest Weston, Joseph Marshall, Tyler Lone Elk, Trevon Spotted Eagle, Delane Ghost, Tyler Iron Boy, Armad American Horse, Coach: Andrew Cottier, Daniel Pawnee Leggins, Bottom: TJ Hollow Horn, Doniel Lopez, Martin Mesteth.

Derek plans to graduate from eighth grade and attend high school at Little Wound and play basketball for the Mustangs. After high school he would like to go on to college, still undecided as to where. These are just a few goals Derek has set for himself.

Some of Derek's hobbies include basketball, football. His favorite style of music is R&B/Hip Hop. His favorite singer is 50C. His favorite food is candy.

The employee spotlight is George Dreamer Jr., his parents are George Sr. and Bessie Dreamer and they live in Pine Ridge.

George attended Pine Ridge School and has been at Porcupine School for about a month.

Some of George's hobbies include reading, writing, and basketball.

George attended college at the United Tribes Tech in North Dakota. In his spare time he likes to be involved in different activities with children such as he has been the coach of a pee wee basketball league.

George says, "loves to coach children and watch them succeed." He also said he tries to be a good role model for children. He states that being in a positive manner helps to motivate the children

New bill to prompt tribes to collect state tobacco tax

PIERRE, S.D. (AP) _ The South Dakota Legislature has passed a bill that is intended to prompt several American Indian tribes to make sure the state tobacco tax is collected on cigarettes sold on their reservations.

The measure would require liquor license holders to be current on state taxes. The measure would apply to tribes and tribal members.

SB98, which now goes to Gov. Mike Rounds, gained 34-1 final approval in the Senate and 53-15 approval in the House. It would require that liquor license holders collect and submit city and state sales taxes, the unemployment insurance tax, tobacco taxes or any other state tax before licenses could be renewed or transferred.

Liquor license holders already must be up to date on property and sales taxes to renew or transfer licenses.

Attorney General Larry Long and Michael Kenyon of the state Revenue Department said earlier that the bill would help the state comply with the 1998 settlement between tobacco companies and states.

Under that agreement, South Dakota receives about $22 million a year, provided the state diligently enforces tobacco laws, Long said. Those laws include making sure all tobacco is properly taxed, he said.

Long said five of the state's nine Indian tribes have agreements with the state to handle taxation, but the other four are selling untaxed and unstamped cigarettes, which violates the tobacco settlement.

If the tribes do not comply, the state risks losing some or all of the $22 million, Long said.

`This will be a tool in our toolbox in order to diligently enforce in those areas in Indian Country where the licensees hold liquor licenses and are selling untaxed and unstamped cigarettes," Long said.

Rep. Tim Rave, R-Baltic, said the bill would help expedite tax negotiations with the four tribes.

Rep. Paul Valandra, D-Mission, a member of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe, said some of the negotiations are nearly done and are awaiting the governor's signature.

The bill would take effect Jan. 1, 2007, giving tribes some extra time to finish tax negotiations with the state. Most new laws go on the books July 1.

Crystal meth and Internet causes of AIDS/HIV :

rates are one prime indicator of high-risk sexual activity. Ten years ago there were approximately 15 million Americans infected with a sexually transmitted disease. Currently, there are an estimated 19 million new cases of STD's each year in the United States.

According to the Centers for Disease Control, American Indians have the third highest rate of HIV/AIDS cases in the Nation.

The CDC has reported that there are more than one million Americans living with the chronic disease of HIV/AIDS.

Of those, American Indians and Alaska Natives represent 2,300 known individuals. Due to low testing rates for HIV/AIDS in Indian country, the infection rates in these populations are thought to be much greater than what is statistically visible.

The State of South Dakota reports an alarming increase in current HIV/AIDS infections rates due in part to people utilizing the Internet to meet perspective sexual partners. This increases the threat of sexual predators to our women and girls as many who hook up on the Internet do not take into consideration the sexual history of those they may encounter.

There are differences to examine on the issues of HIV/AIDS between men and women. Some are physiological and some are social. Women have a much higher biological risk than men for contracting HIV through heterosexual intercourse. In the United States, AIDS-related deaths among women was estimated to have declined by 35 percent, while it declined by 64 percent among men.

In speaking to HIV/AIDS in the context of American Indian populations, one must go beyond the disease, beyond the mortality rates and examine the high-risk lifestyles that may lead one to a path for infection. These high-risk behaviors are often and dangerously thought of as being acceptable in the harsh environment found in many Tribal communities. Substance abuse, poverty, intergenerational trauma, and lowered self esteem issues often lead many in Indian country into not seeing the road they may be on that leads to HIV/AIDS infection. An example, many do not see that when you have intercourse with anyone, you are basically sleeping with everyone your partner has ever had sexual relations with. Experts agree that sexually transmitted diseases such as HIV/AIDS are not on the radar screen of many American Indians.

The greatest challenge is educating the public to the risks associated with acquiring an STD and getting them into a medical facility for treatment. American Indian women tend to access health care much more frequently than men.

In turn, women may receive treatment for an STD but become re-infected due to lack of treatment for their intimate partners.

For many American Indians women in South Dakota, sexual safety is placed on the back burner to more imposing issues such as trying to meet one's daily need for food, safe shelter and the basic necessities of the family.

For native women, there are more obvious variables that could lead to an HIV/AIDS infection than their Caucasian counterpart. Native women experience much higher rates of domestic violence and sexual assaults than mainstream Americans.

These issues keep many women from having the ability to address their own sexual health and safety. They may not be able to negotiate such things as condom use when they live day-to-day in an abusive environment.

The chances for native women to re-experience violence during their lifetime is double, even triple in some tribal communities compared to women of other ethnicities. South Dakota leads all States in the number of criminal investigations in Indian country, with Arizona second and New Mexico a close third. The most common of these investigations involve simple assault, aggravated assault, robbery, rape and sexual molestation. These acts of physical and sexually violence are not isolated to AI/AN females, but are disproportionably high for native children and elders as well.

Beyond the complex social and cultural challenges that American Indians face in HIV/AIDS prevention, there is a new and imposing threat.

Crystal methamphetamine is becoming an extremely volatile issue in the daily lives of our tribal communities.

It expedites the decline of the contemporary Native family and social structures.

Methamphetamine users tend to graduate to intravenous drug usage, thus increasing the risk of sharing needles contaminated with the HIV virus or hepatitis C.

Individuals with substance abuse issues do not tend to practice sexually safety and this contributes to high, unintended pregnancy rates and high STD rates within tribal populations.

Sadly, it is no longer uncommon to see a young mother neglect prenatal care or deliver her child while under the influence of crystal meth.

Many native women see crystal meth as a means of losing weight or to be part of the "in" crowd in harsh reservation environments.

Often, they see the highly addictive nature of this drug only after it torn apart their health and lives.

Women may not always see the negative affect that alcohol and drugs have on their husbands or boyfriends.

Methamphetamine abuse among men are creating instances of men who don't identify themselves as bisexual, acting out high risk sexual activity with other men while under the influence of this drug.

These men who may engage these activities on the down low are at the greatest risk for HIV/AIDS as men who have sexual contact with men are at the highest risk for infection with intravenous drug users a close second.

The risk for HIV/AIDS among women and girls grows daily. The best way to protect the life force of our future generations is through education and helping our native women to have the skills, resources and support systems to address their reproductive health.

The Indian Health Service and the South Dakota Department of Health offer free and confidential testing for sexually transmitted disease.

They are also great resources in getting the facts about HIV/AIDS and sexual safety or find more information on the web at www.womenshealth.gov.

There is no excuse not to be educated to this 100 percent preventable disease.

If you are sexually active at any age, show yourself the ultimate in self respect and get tested for HIV/AIDS. Show your partner that much more love and respect by getting tested together.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I recently received my papers to go to training and I'm anxious but at the same time afraid. I've never been to anything like that before and I'm afraid I won't pass and graduate from it. What do you see for me? Do you see me graduating?

Thank you,
Anxious

Dear Anxious:

I do see you striving really hard to get "into shape." If you would allow your fear of failure to side-track your road to success, then indeed your failure would become your reality and your worst fear realized by your quitting. I see that the strength to face your fear of separation from all that is familiar will not win, and that you will proceed to realize your own dream and become who you truly see you as.

Every step into the unknown does not need to be faced with fear. If I could pass on a dream to people it would be to face the future with the strength of the Creator in your heart and you will be protected.

I see you as successful. I see this as being just the first step on your journey to education and respecting of self. I see this as your first real step to create a better life; to return once again to the reservation to help your people. You are truly blessed on this journey.

Dear Anna,

Recently I filed a sexual harassment complaint and as a result, I was placed on "administrative leave."

I am a physically, mentally, spiritually and emotionally strong Lakota woman who has contributed only well in this community. Are my strengths and talents needed elsewhere? If so, where?

Standing Rock

Dear Standing Rock:

The people that have placed you in this position need to be aware of their own corruption (by trying to protect a perpetrator). In the long run they will not win even though what I see begins to smack of conspiracy.

They will be exposed, and hopefully they are continuing to pay you or your ensuing law suit will shake rattle and roll them. You are correct, I am writing this letter as a warning to them to straighten up, pay attention to the facts, and proceed as though you were their mother, sister or daughter.

The man you accused is guilty, and there are two other women that can confirm that this behavior is within a pattern. For the organization you work for to protect him will be a bigger disaster than their admission of liability and the seeking counseling for him, which may release him from a pattern of bad behavior.

Your strength is gracious and tremendous and you will not be mis-read. It may be in your best personal interest to pursue a career outside of your current environment, simply for personal comfort reasons. You should consider involving yourself with three or four other women, writing that grant, and stretching out there to continue to help others under your won administration. I see it; it's just a question of when.

Dear Anna,

Never in my life, have I felt so passionately for someone as I have with this man during the holidays. It was a friendship issue and then it evolved into something so precious to me. Then he left my life as suddenly as he came into it.

We both knew we couldn't have permanency right now because of both of our circumstances but we continued until the very day he left, it was an experience what I read in romance books and seen in the movies.

To feel love is such a wonderful feeling. The power of it, the spiritual sense of feeling so close to another and the happy feeling that comes with it. In the weeks we knew each other, I never felt such happiness and contentment.

He made me feel like I was the most beautiful woman in the world and he respected me for who I am. We spend hours and hours talking, and discussed all kinds of issues, he treated my children so nice and I grew to love him as someone special. He had to leave, it was just that way, nothing I could have done or he could have done to make it any other way. We both love our children very much and we work to protect them.

He's gone now and in my heart I know he is not returning. We both did what we did, because it felt good and we both knew we couldn't keep it. Why did Tunkshila bring this man into my life? I keep searching for answers. I know I have to get over him and go on with my life. He told me I have to, he told me to live my life to the fullest and to let him go. Our circumstances just won't let us be together.

First time love

Dear First time love:

I am not so sure he is gone forever, but nevertheless, I will treat your question as though your assumption is correct. Tunkshila brings to us that which the soul cries for.

Love is as necessary to life as breath and is the foundation for all life. Sometimes, we are given a brief time with another soul; to spend and share time, to "open" our hearts and minds to the understanding of love. Love helps put the past away and opens doors to possibilities never considered before.

This man has impacted your life greatly and softened your understanding of yourself and what is possible for you within your own life. Love is a blessing and a joy, you are fortunate to have experienced it, even though the time was short.

Unselfish love, as yours is, is so grand as to enhance the entire world, and guarantee you a good home in this world and beyond into the Spirit World.

Life will offer more opportunity for love for you; Tunkshila will offer you another chance, since you sacrificed for the sake of others. Blessings to you.

Dear Anna,

Thank you for your comforting words. I do have another question I hope you can help me with. A gift came up missing and I was hoping you can help me find them. Were they misplaced or stolen?

Baby shoes

Dear Baby shoes:

I see it as an accident. I see them on the table (a table of more than one level), I see wrapping paper and boxes...a plastic trash bag and a trash box - and you got it that is what happened. I'm sorry you lost the shoes, but glad it wasn't theft.

Dear Anna:

What do you think about the Rosebud women not being allowed to be on the Treaty Council because no women were signers of the original treaty? How will that work out?

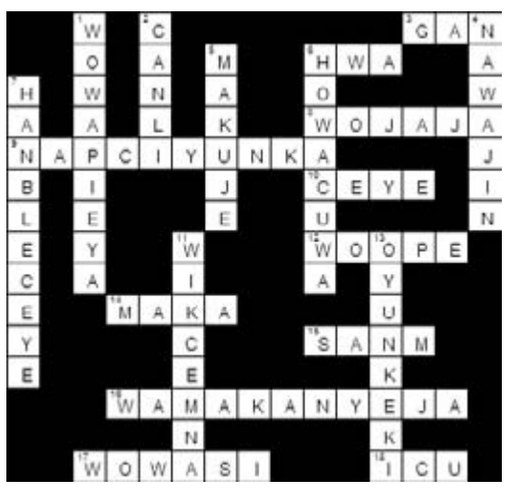
P.O'd women on the Rosebud

Dear Upset women:

I really feel that back when the original treaties were signed that the women were there in another way. I see them "behind the scenes," as Elders and advisors. They did not speak directly or sign anything, but believe me they were present and heard, as the men consulted with them. Today, it is out of balance, because the women's voices are being made silent.

If they want to act in the traditional way, then consult with the Elders and women and speak for them, not exclusify them.

Balance is something that will always happen - sooner or later. If men really wish to exclude women from a voice that is powerful and is for the next seven generations, then they better start having all the babies themselves and they better all be boys, so the real voice of the Creator, which includes all men and all women, will truly ring silent.



Sorry if I aggravated you Rosebud men, but without women, you wouldn't be here, and you would have no voice.

Either do it traditionally, with the women behind you, or come into the way of understanding of the contemporary traditional women (who has to work and support herself and her children, educate the youth, run the counseling programs, are the true activists, and are trying to clean up the historical injury caused by "men" in negotiation without women) or prepare for national embarrassment.

You can email Anna Bee your questions at lakota1868@gwtc.net or fax to (605) 685-1870, or write to PO Box 386, Martin, S.D. 57551. All requests maybe subject to publication. Clearly mark Ask Anna on your request. This column is meant for entertainment purposes only.

Meade County to decide on bar near Bear Butte

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

STURGIS - The Bear Butte International Alliance issues regular monthly reports of meetings of the Meade County commissioners, which are presumably open to the public.

On March 7, the commissioners set the date of, Tuesday, April 4 to hear the application for a beer license by Jay Allen. The hearing will be held at 3:30 p.m. at the Meade County courthouse and BBIA is encouraging people to contact local, tribal, state, and federal legislators to express their concerns about the issue.

Bear Butte retains its State Park status and it is a nationally registered Historic Site and landmark. It is also an area that is protected as a National Wildlife Refuge. Bear Butte Lake is home to many migratory birds and is set aside for conservation and other purposes. It has taken center stage in the controversy over the proximity of proposed businesses to Bear Butte, which plan to sell beer and promote rock concerts during the summer months.

Many tribes on the northern plains consider Bear Butte a sacred shrine and any disturbance to the serene setting is seen as cause for concern. The proposed biker bar and any large venue such as the planned Sturgis Line Amphitheater, which will accommodate 30 thousand concertgoers or more, will surely represent a significant disturbance. Those who make a regular pilgrimage to pray in ceremony are concerned not only about the noise pollution and its effect on the wildlife, but also related problems that necessarily accompany alcohol use on a large scale.

BBIA is also concerned that any trash that accumulates as a result of any large gatherings could represent a taxpayer expense. The summer gathers are also seen as an exploitation of women and such blatant behavior could lead to increase numbers of women seeking shelter at local crisis centers.

Native Americans view the new business ventures as too close for comfort as the parcels have already been purchased and construction has began. What is disconcerting for some is the apparent confidence that the owners have in ultimately being granted a liquor license. Logically, a business owner would not invest in a large-scale project if he were uncertain as to being granted a liquor license.

Many hope that the application hearing is not a done deal, as two issues remain to be satisfied; location of the bar and the character

White Clay liquor stores licenses renewed by commissioners

RUSHVILLE, Neb - The Sheridan County Board of Commissioners renewed the liquor licenses of the three stores which sell thousands of cans of beer each day to the residents of the Pine Ridge reservation. The Jumping Eagle Inn, Mike's Pioneer Service and State Line Liquor of Whiteclay were granted a license by unanimous vote of the commission.

The Nebraska Supreme Court was cited by commissioners to aid in their decision to renew. The case says that a license must be renewed if the establishment is the same as that which is seeking renewal and the premises are such that they are suitable for selling the product.

The Nebraskans for Peace have been opposed to the automatic renewal of liquor licenses by Whiteclay businesses and have made it a priority to further legal challenges to the continuing sales of beer. Their work is being mounted in a strictly legal manner and in deference to the statutes which govern the issuance of liquor licenses in Nebraska.

Those opposed to the sale of beer cite the fact that it is illegal to consume alcohol in an open container in Whiteclay, while the same prohibition exists on the Pine Ridge reservation which is designated as a dry reservation.

Russell Means, Frank LaMere, Duane Martin, Sr. and the Nebraskans for Peace were at the March 6 hearing of the commissioners in which the liquor licenses discussed and tabled for Monday.

Mustangs have other reasons to celebrate, besides State A

KYLE - Many folks are excited about Little Wound School qualifying for the State A tournament in Sioux Falls this weekend but there are a number of other things to be excited about at the school in Kyle that serves the Medicine Root, Eagle Nest, Pass Creek, Porcupine, Wounded Knee and Pine Ridge districts on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

"Last year we finished up with an average daily attendance rate(ADA) of 58.8 per cent, an improvement over the previous year of 51% but a long ways from where we need to be," said Dr. Linda Earring who is in her second year as principal at Little Wound high school, "at the end of the first semester this year, our ADA was 79.53 per cent an improvement of close to 21 percent, now that's exciting."

Little Wound made some changes that were publicly discussed and debated including moving to a later start, 9 a.m. and setting up a four day school week.

"Yes we made those changes, some people agreed and some did not," said Earring, "but just as importantly we made some changes inside the school;

Secretary Norton resigns effective end of March

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

WASHINGTON, DC - Secretary of the Interior, Gale A. Norton has resigned effective at the end of March. At age 52, she has lead Interior for longer than most with a five year reign. She cites wanting to return to the private sector and to spend more time out west as primary reasons for stepping down.

Norton was confirmed as Secretary of the Interior on January 30, 2001 and was previously the Attorney General for the state of Colorado before joining President Bush's cabinet.

The Rocky Mountain News is reporting that Sen. Wayne Allard (R-Loveland) plans to send a letter to President Bush asking him to consider appointing former Senator Ben Nighthorse-Campbell as Norton's successor. If that were to happen, it would be a historic appointment since there never has been a Native American to head the Interior Department which has oversight over vast tracts of federal and Indian lands.

Night Horse-Campbell, a Northern Cheyenne, retired from the Senate in 2004 and was once mentioned as a possible appointee to head the Interior Department when President Bush won the election in 2000.

Gale Norton, Secretary
United States Department of the Interior

As a conservative, she has been at odds with environmentalist over some of the more conservative policies regarding the wilderness. She has been accused of not enforcing the Endangered Species Act as vigorously as she should and allowing snowmobiling in Idaho, which has caused caribou to head to Canada. She has also pushed for opening up more oil and gas drilling on federal lands.

In recent months, she has persuaded several western of the applicant. In a fact sheet that is being made available by BBIA, Jay Allen the owner of Broke Spoke Saloon purchased 600 acres of pastureland from rancher Jim Reed. He envisioned the largest biker bar and concert venue in Sturgis and ironically called it Sacred Ground originally.

The irony was not lost on Native people, as controversy surrounding the name eventually lead to a name change to Sturgis County Line.

The amphitheater has already begun to be constructed and is located within a couple of miles of the sacred Bear Butte.

Bear Butte International Alliance is encouraging all people to, "Think of the Future, to sign petitions, write letters and to keep informed." They want all Native and non-Native people who care about the future of Bear Butte as a sacred place to worship to be in attendance at the Meade County commissioners hearing on the application by Jay Allen to acquire a license to sell beer. They say that people's objections should be heard as the process allows for such concern from a wide variety of citizens.

states to enter into a pact that will allow them to manage reservoirs and contend with shortages of water from the Colorado River.

Winter snows that accumulate in the Colorado Rockies and Montana's Big Horn mountains are the primary source of water for most western states, including the expansive state of California.

Norton has also supported the exploration for natural gas on federal lands, while having to contend with a National Park Service maintenance backlog that may amount to billions of dollars.

The Interior Department administers several departments including, the National Park Service, the U.S. Geological Survey, the Bureau of Land Management, U.S. Fish and Wildlife, Office of Surface Mining, Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Minerals Management Service, and the Bureau of Reclamation.

Some other interesting characteristics of the Interior Department include the fact that it manages 1 out of 5 acres of land in the U.S. and provides the energy resources for nearly one third of the nation's energy needs. The department also works with 562 federally-recognized tribes and provides water to 31 million citizens through 824 dams and reservoirs. Finally, it allows receives millions of visitors to its park system each year and improves habitats on millions of acres of land each year.

Little Wound improves attendance

we did not have a safe school environment, we had a lot of fights in the school and we needed to do something about it."

Little Wound School put together a team that included the attendance clerk, Aquelyn Garnette, the attendance office, Ed Young Man Afraid of his Horses, the freshman adviser, RJ Trujillo, dean of students, Amanda Carlow, safe school officer Brian Hopkins, crossing guard, Desmond Richards and the principal, Dr. Earring.

"We patrol all the time and are constantly monitoring and supervising students," said Earring, "members of the team are visible at different parts of the school during the day and we respond right away to any problem and we do not allow any gang colors, caps or bandanas.

In November, December and January we had no fights and students just feel safer; we also get a list of students absent right away and call parents to find out what is wrong with the student and ask why they are not in school."

Dr. Earring had been warned that some of the changes might reduce enrollment in the high school but at the beginning of the second semester, just the opposite happened.

Enrollment increased. In the fall, the high school enrollment was 317 for the four grades and in the spring, the school enrolled 404 an increase of 87 students.

By class the enrollment at the time of the interview showed 178 freshman in the fall, 161 in February, 56 sophomores in the fall, 101 in February 33 juniors then and 75 now and 50 seniors at the beginning of the year and 61 in February.

"Everyone seems to agree that academics are important," said Earring, "but we have to get students in the door and keep them coming back every day to make a difference.

A good deal of the discussion around education revolves around the No Child Left Behind Act that schools on and off the reservation are trying to deal with. This year schools on the reservation are falling under the standards of the state of South Dakota, a requirement made by the Bureau of Indian Affairs after deciding that it was impossible to set a standard that worked for every tribal or reservation school across the country so to solve that problem, the Bureau put all of their schools under the state standards.

"Here in South Dakota, I figure there are 43 ways in which a school can miss making adequate yearly progress (AYP), for us the challenges are South Dakota's high school graduation rate of 94 percent, the Dakota Step test for our students in third, eighth and 11th grades and the ADA in the elementary school of 75 percent."

Work is being done in this area, last year in math, 20 percent of the students passed, this year 80 percent of the students are passing. The school has set up a freshman academy for all incoming freshman that test below a seventh grade level in reading and math, 61 freshman were included in the academy.

Little Wound set up a comprehensive career day on Feb. 28 inviting the Pine Ridge Area Chamber of Commerce, South Dakota and Nebraska colleges and universities, all branches of the armed forces, reservation businesses, Crazy Horse Mountain and Mount Rushmore that was open to all high school students with invitations going out to area students.

They plan to have one for eighth graders in March to help them learn about high school and how to better prepare.

The school has hired Imogene Roy to integrate Lakota Culture into our curriculum and the school is designing a model to do just that.

"We also have required our high school students to sign up for at least two activities throughout the year and in addition to all of our sports, we also have 28 clubs that offer a wide variety of activities," said Dr. Earring.

Over the last five years the school has graduated an average of 45.35 students and according to Earring, the goal is to graduate all 61 of the school's current seniors.

"We had 40 graduates last year in 2005 and we are trying to track them to see where they are ending up," said Earring, "we had six students eligible for the Gates and two were selected(Aaron DuBray is at the University of North Dakota in Grand Forks and Shawntay Lupi is at South Dakota State University in Brookings), overall we have 16 graduates enrolled in a college or university, we have four in a votech school, one in Job Corps, two are working, five are planning to enroll in a college in the fall and 12 we just do not know where they are at."

"My mother told me I was going to be a teacher and I became a teacher," said Earring, "after graduating from high school in Martin, I went to Northern State College and became the first woman in South Dakota to get an industrial arts education degree and I followed it up with a masters in education administration focusing on being a high school principal and a doctorate in education focusing on being a school superintendent, both from the University of South Dakota."

Dr. Lynda Earring is just over halfway through her second year as principal at Little Wound; she came to the Kyle based school with 30 years of experience in education that has included her first time as a principal at Cheyenne Eagle Butte High School, teaching for Wayne State College and working at Marty Indian School as a superintendent, at Winnebago, Crazy Horse, Pine Ridge and Wounded Knee District School.

"We have developed an exit outcome for our students, our teachers sat down and decided what our students needed to have on graduation day and from that we designed a curriculum and a syllabus," concluded Earring, "I only have four years to produce a product, I can't wait, we have to move along."

a United States tribal court judge ruled in 2004 that Smoke was actually Charles Roger Leo Adams Jr. from Tennessee and was not an Indian.

Adams, whom South Dakota authorities say also also goes by the name Leo Wolfslayer, was indicted by a federal grand jury on Feb. 15 for health care fraud, false statements and aggravated identity theft.

Adams, who now lives in Rapid City, appeared in court last month and pled not guilty to the indictment.

The maximum penalty upon conviction is 10 years imprisonment and a $25,000 fine.

Rosebud amendments in limbo

BY ROSE CORDIER
Time's Correspondent

ROSEBUD - After more than two years since the Rosebud Sioux Tribal Council appointed a Constitutional Task Force to gather proposed constitutional amendments, the election process is still in limbo. Tribal members, anxious to make changes to the 60 year old document, want to know why the amendment process is taking so long.

"As far as the Task Force is concerned, our job is over," stated Ronnie Neiss, a member of the now defunct Constitutional Task Force. According to Neiss, the Task Force submitted 27 proposed amendments t the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) on April 17, 2005. The amendments were gathered from tribal members throughout a series of public hearings and through the mail over a period of several months.

Neiss said that he is disappointed that the process is taking so long. "It is coming up on a year since we turned the amendments over to the Secretary of Interior (BIA) and they still have not scheduled an election," he continued, "the amendments should have been voted on by now. I see the delay as the continued paternalism of the federal government and outright obstructionism."

Other Task Force members appointed by the tribal council in January 2004 are Lynette Bodeaux, Duane Hollow Horn Bear, Linda Marshall, Eric Nixon, Ed Valandra and Ione Quigley. The Task Force received 182 written proposed amendments from approximately 50 tribal members. Twenty seven amendments were eventually approved by the Task Force. Tribal and federal law mandates that the amendments be submitted to the Secretary of Interior for final approval and that when approved, that the Secretary schedule a Secretarial Election so the tribal members can vote on the amendments.

On Feb. 8, Rosebud Agency Superintendent, Cleve Her Many Horses, met with the tribal council and discussed the BIA's concerns about several of the proposed amendments. The tribal council asked Her Many Horses to contact the Department of Interior Field Solicitor, Marcia Kimball, and request that she come to Rosebud to meet with the Task Force, BIA Election Board, and the tribal council.

In a telephone interview, Her Many Horses indicated that he would invite Kimball to Rosebud soon. Her Many Horses said it was his understanding that the BIA has comments on the wording of the submitted amendments only, not on their content.

Daschle may consider running for president

ABERDEEN - Former Senate Democratic leader Tom Daschle says he is considering a presidential bid in 2008.

Daschle says he hasn't ruled anything in or out at this point.

He says he's encouraged by the strong support he has gotten in his home state of South Dakota and around the country.

Daschle lost his bid for re-election to the US Senate in 2004 by just 4,500 votes.

In discussing a possible presidential bid, Daschle said President Bush and Republicans have overemphasized the importance of the war on terror. He says the US is no safer now than it was before the 2003 invasion of Iraq.

Another possible candidate in 2008 is Democratic Senator Joe Biden of Delaware. Biden told NBC's "Meet the Press" Sunday that he intends to see if he can garner enough support to get the Democratic nomination.

Sitting Bull College cited in national publication

FORT YATES, N.D. (AP) _ A national business publication lists Sitting Bull College as one of 10 ``cutting-edge programs for budding entrepreneurs."

Fortune Small Business recognized the tribal college on Standing Rock reservation last week, along with business programs at Harvard University, the University of Texas and University of Arizona.

``We're very happy and excited," Laurel Vermillion, the college's interim president, said Tuesday.

Unemployment on the Standing Rock reservation, along the North Dakota-South Dakota border, fluctuates from 35 percent in the summer to 75 percent in winter, said Ron Walters, the college resource development director.

Sitting Bull College has started a computer consulting business on the reservation, which has a population of about 6,000. The school plans to open a $3.4 million business entrepreneurship center, possibly beginning construction next fall.

Jeffry Timmons, a business professor at Babson College in Wellesley, Mass., is to speak at the college next week about business start-ups. Timmons started a Native American Initiative at Babson College.

``We're anxious to hear what other tribes are doing," Vermillion said.

Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Tribe makes $1 Million challenge donation to NCAI's embassy

WASHINGTON - Indian Country's dream of a permanent embassy for Native nations in Washington, D.C. came closer to a reality today with a $1 million matching contribution from the Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community of Minnesota to the National Congress of American Indians (NCAI) Embassy of Tribal Nations Capital Campaign.

"This is a tremendously gracious gift that will benefit Indian people for generations," said NCAI President Joe Garcia. "It is a huge step in securing a home in Washington where tribal nations and American Indian organizations can come together under one roof to continue to do the work so important to Indian people. I humbly thank the tribal leaders and people of the Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Community."

Shakopee Mdewakanton Sioux Vice-Chairman Glynn A. Crooks announced the grant at NCAI's Tribal Nations Legislative Summit: 109th Congress Executive Council meeting in Washington, D.C.

"It makes great sense for there to be an Indian Embassy in the nation's Capitol," said Crooks. "When Indian people are in town visiting their Senators and Congressman they will also have a place they can call home."

Crooks encouraged tribes to donate what they can to the Embassy campaign.

"We know that many tribes are not in the position of making a million dollar contribution to this project," he said.

"But considering the many tribes that are members of NCAI, anything you are able to give would help to make the embassy a reality."

The Shakopee tribe also made an additional $100,000 contribution to NCAI for general operational support.

To learn more about the Embassy of Tribal Nations Capital Campaign or to make a donation, please visit www.ncai.org or contact NCAI Director of Development Mellor Willie at mwillie@ncai.org or 202-466-7767.

Officials: Urban Indian Health Service in danger

ABERDEEN(AP) - The Urban Indian Health service could close in the next couple years unless more funding is found, officials of the federal agency say.

President Bush's budget for the next fiscal year does not have a line item for Urban Indian Health. The centers in Aberdeen, Sioux Falls and Pierre are considered one office, and together, they get about $1 million in federal funds.

Urban Indian Health gets some grant money along with federal funding.

If the federal budget approved later this year includes no money for Urban Indian Health, the 34 offices nationwide will be in trouble, said Val Jones, who heads the Aberdeen office.

That office serves about 1,600 patients a year, and Jones said closing the office would mean some people in Aberdeen would go without medical services.

Urban Indian Health receives money from Indian Health Services and focuses on caring for Indians, although it accepts all patients who meet income requirements.

The president's budget would cut $33 million, a significant part of UIH's overall spending, according to Georgiana Ignace, president of the National Council of Urban Indian Health, who testified in Washington last month.

Bobbi Piasecki of Aberdeen, a grant writer and Northern State University student, said UIH clinics offer some services that other medical centers don't.

``One of the main attractions I have to the clinic is how sensitive they are to the Native American cultures,'' she said. ``SDUIH works with specialized, culturally identifiable medical needs such as diabetes, which affects more than 15 percent of the Native American population.''

Along with primary medical care, UIH also offers some dental service, screenings, health care education, optical service and special programs.

Randi Chingman, 19, of Aberdeen, said she and her 17-month-old son often seek medical services at the Aberdeen UIH center. If it closes, Chingman said she will do what she must to make sure her son gets needed care. But she said she probably would not be able to afford general medical care for herself.

``I don't know what I would do with myself if I were to get sick or need something'' and the local UIH office was closed, Chingman told the Aberdeen American News.

Gov. Mike Rounds and the Legislature already have sent letters of support, along with the Aberdeen Area Tribal Chairman's Board and the U.S. Senate Committee on Indian Affairs.

Kyle man pleads guilty to involuntary vehicular manslaughter

RAPID CITY, S.D. (AP) _ Instead of standing trial, a Kyle man has admitted to causing an accident that killed another man.

According to the U.S. Attorney's Office, Rex David Price, 20, pleaded guilty in federal court in Rapid City to involuntary vehicular manslaughter.

An indictment accuses him of driving while under the influence of alcohol and causing an accident that killed Laddimer Phillip Price.

The accident happened in May in Shannon County on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

Price could get up to six years in prison when he's sentenced.

Our Views

A good news, bad news kind of week

Good news

Good news comes to us in the form of the Little Wound Mustangs. Let us all be cheerleaders and show our young ambassadors that we are behind them one hundred percent. It is the kind of stuff that dreams are made of.

Getting to compete in the state tournament is an honor in any sport and a great indicator of a sports program that is promoting student-athletes who are making us all proud. Athletic director, Richard "Tuffy" Lunderman says that the Mustangs will be going up against Clark, who is undefeated, in the first round of the State A tournament on Thursday.

Cheer for the Mustangs as they represent each and every one of us who have a stake in promoting good sportsmanship and strong competition that is reflective of an enduring Lakota spirit.

Congratulations to a job well done to Bennett County Lady Warriors and White River.

Bad news

Bad news comes in the form of proposed beer sales with a couple of miles of Bear Butte.

Construction has already begun on a 35,000-seat amphitheater as the owners are already assuming that the Meade County commissioners will grant them a beer license.

It is time for people of all convictions to attend the hearing for the application to sell beer scheduled for Tuesday, April 4 and let the commissioners hear their voices. The people need to let them know that it borders on sacrilege to allow construction and beer, no less, to be sold and consumed in close proximity to such a sacred shrine to the Lakota.

It would be akin to selling beer next to the shrine in Bethlehem where Jesus was born. Or, even setting up an outside biker bar next to the 'wailing wall' in Jerusalem. People of all faiths just would not hear of it and would put a stop to it.

Thoughts that come from the heart

Belief systems are part of ignorance in school systems

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Throughout this last school year, I have read about the money problems of the Bennett County School system in the local paper. Without getting too specific, the school system has had a pretty hefty shortfall in their budget. Their status in being eligible for heavy Impact Aid has changed recently. Impact Aid is government money earmarked for school districts that have within their boundaries land that is owned by the federal government or is not a part of the local tax rolls such as Indian lands. The government provides on a per-student basis funds for students who live on Indian lands.

School districts like Bennett County and Shannon County receive money for those students who reside on federal land or trust land to educate those students. Basically, Indians are not levied a personal tax by the counties for their land because it is in trust, or most of it is, so the government funds the money through Impact Aid. In essence, it is also a treaty right. Our ancestors gave up thousands of acres of land for education and health care.

To meet that shortfall, two country schools will close this fall and the school will go to a four day week along with staff cuts and services to students being adjusted.

So the amount of money the public schools get for Impact Aid depends on how they apply for it and the formula is calculated on the enrollment of students who live on trust lands that are in the schools' boundaries.

The Douglas School District is an example of granting Impact Aid to a special population of dependents who are employed at Ellsworth Air Force base and which represents a significant portion of the district's budget. Any closure of the air base would have impacted the district in a rather negative way.

Several years ago, a civil rights movement was initiated by the Lakota people in Bennett County because of the alleged voting irregularities in the city voting procedures, and because of the problems Indian parents couldn't get resolved within the school system or the obvious prejudice of county residents.

Regardless, the school lost enrollment and parents moved their children to other schools. Whether it was the drop in the enrollment or irregularities in how the student count was calculated in order to qualify for receive Impact Aid, the fact is that there was a budget shortfall.

In the early morning hours of the school week, one can see how buses pull in and out of town at the stoplight on Highway 18. The buses come from neighboring reservation schools of American Horse, Little Wound, and Porcupine School. The amount probably averages more than 150 students.

Those students on those buses have to get up early in order to catch their bus before 7 a.m. and after school they return at 4 or 6 p.m. and later if they ride the activity buses.

One morning when I was at the convenience store getting fuel, I watched the buses coming and going and I thought of a time when I attended school in the county high school. Back then it was just a given, when you got to high school, you either made the choice to stay on and continue on to the high school after graduating eighth grade or you made a choice to go to another school and to board there.

I had no choice as my mother insisted I go to the local high school as I had the grade school. She taught me how to ignore the prejudiced minds of the non-Indian students and instructors. It was a survival skill that we learn in growing up in poverty and being Indian in a white community. My mother was tough, she held me to a structured educational life. She made go to school and I learned that it would benefit me in the end.

My first encounter with prejudiced minds was when I was in third grade. I loved art and design and was so proud of myself for designing an outstanding art piece. The pride I felt of that piece when I was finished had me beaming, especially when my teacher bragged about my art skills. She said I would surely win a ribbon in the upcoming art contest. I felt proud of my work, since she told me, and my fellow students thought it was a prize. I was confident I would get that ribbon.

The day of the art show arrived and wanting to see how the judges will place the ribbon on my art, I stood around the little gallery of the student's art watching and waiting. The judges were parents, mothers of my fellow students. At long last, after making their rounds with their clipboard and ribbons, they came to the area where my beautiful drawing was. I watched in anticipation and watched as one mother exclaimed how beautiful my piece was done and how much it stood out and she zeroed in my creation as did the other mother. The pride I felt at that moment as I knew my valued art was worthy of that ribbon. She knelt down and read the name and that expression on her face and how she mouthed a little oh and stepped back and walked on burned in my memory. It burned in my memory because I was confused as to why she didn't place the

Tribes want to show the world who they are

Charlee Bad Wound, 17, Pine Ridge, is winner of the Student Division of the annual South Dakotans for Open Government Sunshine Week Essay Contest. She is a senior at Pine Ridge High School. This year's topic was, "Equal Rights to All and Special Privileges to None." She will receive a $250 prize and a plaque. The essay was originally published in the Sioux Falls Argus Leader.

For me, equal rights has been a vague principle for my living situation. I am a 17-year-old Native American girl, and I live in one of the country's most poverty-stricken reservations.

Living on Pine Ridge Reservation is not always an example of equal rights. Equal rights means discrimination is prohibited, but on a daily basis myself and others are faced with slander and libel.

It has become an issue that Native American reservations get special privileges, because we get free medical care, free schooling, and we continue to get debit cards. They call it "favoritism," but I would say it is compensation for all the wrongs that have been done to our culture throughout history.

With all that, it still isn't the proper care we all desperately need.

People in other states, or maybe even our own state who have different ethnic backgrounds, seem to have an easier time getting basic things they need, such as electricity, heating and other home requirements. I have lived in these conditions long enough to say, "Freedom isn't always free."

Most times, getting a decent home can be a problem to many who are homeless or unable to buy a home. Like others, we aren't able to get a loan to buy a sturdy home, but instead we are given mobile homes that need much work to make that place seem like a home.

It's a normal thing to see houses torn down and rough looking, but when I go elsewhere, such as to cities, I see beautiful homes and neater living conditions. Maybe they have better resources or manage to do things on their own with more knowledge.

That isn't our situation. For instance, we are rarely taught how to manage money or how to be on our own. That isn't helpful when we need to make choices for ourselves or when we want to go out on our own.

It's hard to say that everyone is treated equally, because in reality, we're not.

We, as a people, are looked down on because of the way we live and by the way our environment looks. I know I plan to go somewhere and do something, as many others do, but how can we do that when our living situation and ethnic background puts doubt in the minds of those people who have better medical care, higher incomes?

A demonstration of equal rights would help Native American populations, along with many others across the country who struggle the way we do. If special privileges were to go to no one, then why is it we, as a people, fight so hard to gain the respect from those who are of different races?

Though others may not see our ability to prosper, we strive to prove that we are able to rise above, even when it seems hard. Equal rights would allow us, as a tribe, as an extended family, to better the way we live and to better the way we are looked at. It would help us lower the ongoing level of poverty that puts the lack of confidence in others around us, and mostly ourselves.

We are all supposed to be treated equally, so why can't we treat each other with the respect and dignity we all so rightfully deserve?

As a child growing up, I have been faced with equal rights problems, but I know if I voice an opinion I will have helped it just a little bit.

If we put our heads together and use our resources for constructive progress, we can be seen for who we really are and not for the statistics.

We can perpetuate growth in our culture again. We can express the strength and confidence that once made us who we were long ago and who we still are as people today.

With that, I leave to say we still await equality and the chance to show the world who we are as people of a Native American tribe.

Northern Perspectives

I'm all 'rezzed out' and proud of it

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

My niece, Lisa, lives next door and we are forever exchanging ideas and sentiments about Lakota life on the "rez."

She often invokes the term "rezzed out" and I have worked to figure out the full ramifications of resembling that remark. Deep down and even on the surface, I think I'm uncharacteristically "rezzed" out.

Watohansna duwa cicikese doku ecun hantas he "rezzed out" ecakiyapi. Ins, duwe dokcinkiye ti nahan igluse hantas he "rezzed out" keyapi. He wicoiye ki lela woicake ce le. Tunjan wan hecunse omakiyake ca he doku ca kapi miseya slolowa wacin.

Before I engaged in my writing and reporting for the Lakota Country Times some people across the northern plains thought I was a white guy.

That has since changed as the picture I took with Sen. Tim Johnson one time clearly shows my rather visible brown tinge in the glistening sunlight.

There is something noble and beautiful in being able to identify with your own people of color, but then being "rezzed" out surely must encompass more. I think the term captures the essence of Lakota behavior, conversation, music, food, social interactions and many aspects of life on the rez.

Lakota people are wonderfully creative and humorous as they try to describe themselves in a mild self-deprecating way.

Put another way, Lakota people are able to jokingly tease each other about our way of life; however, there are some aspects of it that only we can use towards other Lakota people. If a white guy were to deliver a full lecture on the drawbacks to being "rezzed out" he might be run out of town. So, as we poke fun at ourselves, there are certain cultural rules that govern that kind of cultural humor, turned inward.

I think I qualify in several regards and aptly fit the profile of one who might be "rezzed out." I live in a trailer house and often describe myself as 'trailer trash,' but only I can say that. I earned my doctoral level credentials from Harvard, but I work for minimum wages. As I look at myself in the mirror, I think of my circumstances and think, "I could be rezzed out." I prefer to live in a place that suffers from an unemployment rate of 80-85 percent by one unofficial estimate.

I don't want to contribute to the reservation 'brain drain' and head for the hinterland where someone just might know what my credentials mean. I guess I could stand on the highway going toward the casino with a sign that reads, "Harvard grad will think for food." That's not very original, but perhaps it might qualify me for the label of being "rezzed out."

I think there are good ways that one might fit the mold of being "rezzed out." For example, if I were receiving some kind of pension or veterans disability check each month, you might see me trekking in my old SUV to the dollar store or Mickey Dee's.

That kind of behavior would be too predicable. Or, you might see me down at LIEAP in Rosebud, trying to get an additional allocation before winters end. Or, you might even see the old cars around my house and though they might represent a buffer zone for me, to you I could be "rezzed out" for exercising such behavior.

That's it; I think being "rezzed out" means doing things in a rather predictable way that often smacks of economy.

Or, it could point to behavior that is characteristic of those who live on reservation lands and when we engage in such behavior, someone might ridicule us in private because they could be more sophisticated. Sometimes our behavior might even border on tackiness, but then it has to do with being in the survival mode.

Ohan, ca le wicoiye "rezzed out", wasicu ya ki nahankci eyatela slolowasni eyas dokasni. Duweni elamatunsi ca he waste'. Upiya unpo nahan awinciglakapo. Nagik Sapa, le miye. Sicangu Oyanke lecetkiya wiohiyanpatakiya wati.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (nagik sapa) Sicangu Lakota, is a decorated Vietnam Veteran with a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and resides on the Rosebud.

Notes From Indian Country

Seeking the road to sovereignty

By Tim Giago (Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

If you want to get into a knockdown, dragged out, two-fisted argument with a local non-Indian citizen (wasicu in Lakota), just bring up the subject about Indian sovereignty. Boy, does that raise their hackles.

"How in the Holy Hell can you guys claim to be a sovereign nation when the federal government does everything for you except wipe your behind?" is a comment that just missed my head as I ducked last week.

At this point, if you can consider this debate one of intelligent discourse, you then bring up Indian treaties. Of course, for the most part, this never does any good because the person seated across from you never read a treaty and doesn't believe that a legal document that is more than one hundred years old applies to him anyhow. "I wasn't around when those treaties were signed so they don't mean a damn to me," he says with a very red face. "Well, you weren't around when the U. S. Constitution was signed either, but you still believe that to be a legal document, don't you?" I retort.

As you have probably surmised by now this is an endless and too often, a pointless argument. Those who are adamantly opposed to the very thought of Indian sovereignty can bring up as many objections as I can positives.

To acknowledge their point, most Indian nations are indeed quite dependent upon the federal government. It funds our schools, hospitals, housing and our very government on most Indian reservations.

But as I always point out, using the Fort Laramie Treaty of 1868 as an example, the government signed those treaties with equal sovereigns and clearly laid out provisions for education, health and government within those treaties and gladly accepted millions of acres of extremely productive land in exchange.

The treaties were signed by two sovereign nations "in perpetuity." That literally means "for eternity."

We all know the Indian joke that it is written in very small print at the end of the treaty, "As long as the grass grows and the river flows or 90 days which ever comes first." But, fortunately, that little quip still remains just that, a joke.

John Reyhner, Northern Arizona University, a man who has written extensively on Indian education, expressed some very cogent thoughts on Indian sovereignty. He wrote that sovereignty involves taking back control and taking responsibility for one's life and for one's nation rather than leaving it to others to make decisions for you. "It can mean paying taxes to support one's tribal government; it means choosing competent, visionary leaders, and it means being educated," he wrote.

He continued, " Sovereignty means that one has to deal with other sovereign nations on a government-to-government basis and that involves knowledge about laws, treaties, policies, business, economics, and a vast variety of subjects that cannot be dealt with without a modern education."

Reyhner believes that you are not a sovereign nation if you have to call in a "white guy" every time something breaks down. In other words if you have to call a white mechanic, lawyer, or a medical doctor to fix your car, handle your legal matters, or see to your health, you are not sovereign.

Reyhner touched upon something many of us have been writing about for years. I started a newspaper on the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota because like Mr. Reyhner, I firmly believe that if we want to move into the 21st century as a sovereign people, we have to start doing things by ourselves and for ourselves.

So much of what lies ahead is wrapped up in how we educate our children. If they do not stay in school or go on to a higher education they will become a part of the problem instead of a part of the solution.

We need our own engineers, accountants, business managers, teachers, college professors, doctors, lawyers, construction companies, newspapers, radio stations, television stations, department stores, gas stations, hotels, banks, schools and colleges. In other words, we need to take control of our own lives, our own resources and our own destiny.

But the curriculum in the reservation schools has to be adjusted dramatically to include the type of thinking that takes us away from the mentality of colonization.

We have been forced to learn our own history from those who do not know our history. We have been taught to seek out menial jobs in order to survive. In other words, we have been trained to look at the small picture instead of the bigger picture.

And I believe, as Mr. Reyhner believes, that we can do all of these things and still live within the boundaries of our own culture, our own spirituality and our own traditions.

The Indian colleges on the many reservations in America have begun this process and they cannot allow themselves to be whip sawed by outside associations and accreditation bureaus that do not know who an Indian is or what that Indian is striving to achieve. The key may well lie in the field of communications.

The road to true sovereignty is rife with pitfalls, angry people, and mountains to climb, but I believe a determined and educated Indian people can attain this worthy goal and turn back several centuries of dishonor.

ribbon on my art. It wasn't until years later that I realized I didn't get that ribbon because my name was Indian and when she read that, her ignorance became her judge.

I am not telling this story to get pity as a poor little Indian girl but because of that little pain I endured as a little girl. It is somewhat the same pain that Indian students and their parents avoid so they get up early to bus out. They do it day after day because where they go there in a comfortable environment for learning.

It was with those same thoughts that I and my husband would rise early in the morning and get our children up to catch a bus to Little Wound or American Horse School. I wanted my children to get a good education just like I did in Bennett County. The school offers a sound academic learning foundation and the community has kept that high academic structure through years and years of development. We either had to learn to deal with ignorant minds or make that choice to move on.

In my sophomore year, I moved on. I went to live in Kyle with a relative so I could attend the high school there. It was the first time I felt comfortable to learn and I learned. I was on the honor roll all four semesters and I was free to join whatever school activity I wanted and felt comfortable in doing so.

It wasn't until I had read an essay written by my oldest daughter as she told her story of attending grade school at Martin and how she felt she was dark so she had to endure racial remarks by some of the non Indian students. My heart broke when I read the paragraph where a young man, whose family owned the local hardware store, would make her days hard to get through and she learned to avoid him, to avoid the racist remarks of being "a dirty, dark Indian." How she stayed in the bathroom because of her fear of him when she shoved her on the steps and wouldn't let her in the classroom.

I let her go to Little Wound High School where she aspired to be an honor student and eventually graduated with honors. She learned about her culture, language and the history of her Lakota heritage. It was worth it to wake up early and get them on the bus. It was worth it to wait up late until she got back home on the activity bus from basketball and volleyball games. I kept the scanner on so I can hear how the bus was progressing in bringing her home. But that long bus ride deprived her of valuable family time in the morning and at night.

In 1994, I left my newspaper career to return home to help care for my sick mother. I felt lucky that I landed a job with Bennett County Schools with a three year grant program that was designed to help bridge that gap between the white and Indian community to help Lakota students graduate. I remembered my childhood and wanted to make a difference. I left after the first year. It was going to take more than a three year grant to bond two cultures.

It was a system where we couldn't have a feather ceremony on school grounds because it was considered a religious act, but yet we couldn't plan activities on Wednesday nights because it was church night and the cooks in the cafeteria cooked for Lent.

On game nights, when the crowd enters the big Legion auditorium, it's Indians to the left and non-Indians to right. I don't know when that started, it's just been that way for years.

In time the community will adjust to the budget shortfall in the school system and Indian parents will still get up early to get their children on the bus to attend school up to 48 miles away. I felt for the parents who made comments in the local paper about the loss of their country schools and the changes they would have to make. That's similar to the emotions that Indian parents have when they bus their children out. It happens that way because of strong belief systems on both sides.

Whether it be ignorant minds that can't come together, or racism or prejudice on either side, it is still a belief system. And belief systems can't be changed unless there is desire.

Lance Morgan: Indian Country now has the 'Meth Diet'

Editor's Note: The followign column was written by Lance Morgan is the CEO of Ho-Chunk Inc., the economic development corporation of the Winnebago Tribe of Nebraska. Morgan is Winnebago. It was orginally printed as a column by Mr. Morgan on Indianz.com.

On Indianz.com the drug meth has been a big topic lately. There was a special session on meth and its impact at the Washington, D.C., meeting of the National Congress of American Indians.

I have touched on meth several times in my column for the Winnebago Indian News, our tribal paper, but always in a "why the hell would people do that to themselves way." The sullen look of the toothless, receding gums and sore covered face of the sleepy and unemployed is never a good look for anyone.

But I noticed something the other day, about meth and its impact on our thinking in our community that kind of scares me. I know someone who got thrown in jail for drugs, dried out, and then went to treatment. I went to visit them and the first thing I noticed is that they gained significant weight. I even said "Hey, you're getting kind of chubby. That's great."

The rez can be a strange place sometimes. It occurred to me that in the last few years I have thought that people gaining weight has been a healthy and positive sign before. Of course this goes contrary to everything we are being taught about health and weight gain, but since meth causes you to lose weight, it has the strange impact of transforming weight gain into a healthy sign.

The impact on our thinking doesn't stop there though. It also makes weight loss, especially rapid weight loss, a very suspicious activity in our community. If someone loses weight and you haven't seen them at the track or at Whirling Thunder, the tribe's wellness center, it looks bad. Now that I think about it, I have to admit that I have wondered and gossiped before about people losing weight and if they are doing drugs.

There is the South Beach Diet, the Adkins Diet, and now we have the Meth Diet.

I don't mean to try and make light of this, I just wanted to point out how this drug has crept so quickly into our thinking that it has dramatically impacted the way we view a simple thing like a healthy weight. I don't know when this happened, but it has definitely slowly evolved in the last few years.

When this little observation occurred to me, I thought it was witty and ironic and that I would write a funny column about it. But now that I think about it, it isn't funny. I

It is actually quite sad that this drug has impact so many families lives and our thinking, and yet we still do so little about it. I didn't grow up thinking this way about drugs and weight, but unfortunately our kids are.

Tribal leaders seek help from the White House on partnership for meth problem

WASHINGTON - The National Congress of American Indians President Joe Garcia announced recently announced a 'Call for Action' and request for a White House partnership to combat the ever increasing problem of methamphetamine use and drug trafficking in Indian communities.

"Methamphetamine is killing our people and devastating our communities." said Garcia. "It is our collective responsibility to put forth a collaborative effort to curb the use of this drug by increasing law enforcement on tribal lands, marshalling resources to address the health and social service needs of our people plagued by the drug problem and educating our young people on the deadly ramifications of its use."

Citing data from a white paper released by NCAI's Policy Research Center, Garcia noted:

"According to a report by the Denver Post, from 2003 to 2004 - the year characterized by the highest documented increase in crystal methamphetamine (meth) use - criminal charges for drug possession increased 353 percent, assaults tripled, theft nearly doubled, and child abuse increased by 85 percent on the Wind River Indian Reservation. Similar reports are cropping up from reservations nationwide. Farther south, the Navajo Nation has experienced a more than 100 percent increase in meth use on the reservation in the past five years. Recent data from the Indian Health Service estimate that 30 percent of American Indian youth have experimented with methamphetamines."

San Carlos Apache Chairwoman Kathleen Kitcheyan shared her own tribe's experience with meth use. "There have been 120 suicide attempts and 84 actual suicides in my tribe alone since 2002," said Kitcheyan. "Some of these were directly related to the abuse of meth. Last year, in my tribe, 63 babies were born addicted to crystal meth. This has to change."

Garcia laid out three objectives for a joint effort between tribal leaders, the Administration and Members of Congress: 1) tribal leaders to form reservation initiatives on drug enforcement and prevention; 2) the White House to organize an initiative for interagency cooperation on drug enforcement and prevention in Indian Country; and 3) a joint hearing of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and the House Resources Committee to explore the needs for legislation and funding.

National Congress of American Indians Call for Action on the Methamphetamine and Drug Trafficking Crisis in Indian Country

1) Call for Tribal Leaders to Form Reservation Initiatives on Methamphetamine and Drug Enforcement and Prevention

a. Many tribes are already working in cooperative interagency drug enforcement and prevention task forces.

b. Drug trafficking does not respect reservation borders. NCAI encourages all tribes to develop local cooperative initiatives that respect tribal authority, promote prevention and health, and promote law enforcement against drug traffickers. Identify local needs and our job at national level is to help you meet those needs.

c. NCAI encourages tribes to pass legislation to outlaw meth use and production on tribal lands.

2) Call for a White House Initiative for Interagency Cooperation to Address Methamphetamine and Drug Enforcement and Prevention in Indian Country

a. White House organization and maintenance of a federal response in partnership with tribes and state and local governments. Law enforcement and health care in Indian country are federal responsibilities. The issue crosses many federal agencies - BIA Law Enforcement, Department of Justice (DOJ), Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), Drug Enforcement Agency (DEA) and the Indian Health Service (IHS).

b. At the national level, the commitment of resources, manpower and cooperation are required to address the problem.

c. Focused attention of White House and federal agencies to improve the federal, tribal, state and local cooperation.

d. The first step is to involve Indian tribes in national and regional meetings on Methamphetamine and Drug Trafficking in order to promote cooperation.

3) Call for a Joint Hearing of the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs and the House Resources Committee

a. A Congressional Hearing to focus the attention of key Congressional and Administration leaders.

b.Convene high level Administration officials from DOJ, DEA, BIA and IHS to discuss how Congress can help these agencies be more effective and focused in promoting law enforcement and prevention cooperation in Indian country.

c. Invite key tribal leaders to identify needs and concerns with regard to more effective and focused law enforcement and prevention measures.

d. Increase resources. Tribal police departments are stretched far beyond capacity. We need to ensure that federal agencies and tribal government agencies are appropriately funded to address this crisis that threatens not only Indian communities, but also their neighbors.

Council removes Sisseton-Wahpeton chairman from office

AGENCY VILLAGE (AP) - The chairman of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Oyate Tribe has been removed from office amid allegations he misappropriated more than $698,000.

J.C. Crawford

The tribal council's action against J.C. Crawford came Friday during a closed session.

Tribal officials refused to release information from the hearing. But Crawford _ who attended the session _ said the executive session vote to remove him was 5-3.

Attempts to reach tribal officials were unsuccessful.

The Sisseton-Wahpeton Oyate District Chairman Association has accused Crawford of misappropriating $698,125 in seven separate incidents beginning in 2003 and continuing through 2005.

The association also accuses Crawford of gross incompetence, improper conduct and malfeasance of office. Among the accusations, Crawford is accused of misusing credit cards issued by the tribe, acting outside the scope of his authority and improperly entering into an agreement without seeking council oversight, according to documents obtained by the Watertown Public Opinion.

Crawford, who denies doing anything wrong, said the council threw out four of seven allegations before voting to remove him.

Following the hearing, Crawford said he was the victim of a political agenda.

``This was not an objective hearing,'' he said. ``Several of the council members went in there with premeditated decisions.''

Crawford also said his right to due process had been violated and that he could challenge the ruling in court. But, he added, he had not decided what he might do.

``It's a tough decision,'' said Crawford. ``I have to decide if I want the emotional burden of continuing to go through this.''

Even after his removal, Crawford said he plans to continue to be involved in tribal leadership.

``I want people to know that this is not a cancerous place,'' said Crawford. ``Politics aside, there are still plenty of very good people living in this area and our government continues to function.''

Daschle to keynote journalism fundraiser

RAPID CITY - Former Senator Tom Daschle will be the keynote speaker at a fundraiser for the Native American Journalists Foundation, Inc., on the evening of June 6. 2006.

Daschle has been a firm supporter of Indian journalism for many years and sees his appearance at the fundraiser as a chance to promote Indians into journalism.

"I will only be in Rapid City for the one night but I assured Tim Giago, the president of the Native American Journalists Foundation, Inc., and my longtime friend, that I would be there to help him in any way possible," Daschle said.

The fundraiser is by invitation only and will be held at the Prairie Edge Trading Post in Rapid City. Ray Hillenbrand, owner of Prairie Edge will be the host.

Food will be served and the special invitation to the fundraiser will be sent out in a few weeks, according to Giago, the president of the NAJF, Inc. A drum group of young Lakota singers will be in attendance and Giago hopes to have Jackie Bird, an accomplished hoop dancer, as the entertainer for the evening.

Daschle announced this week that he might consider running for president of the United States. He said, "I'm encouraged by the strong support many people have voiced for my candidacy around the country and in South Dakota. I'll make a decision at some point later on this year."

At one time Giago challenged Daschle for his senate seat, but dropped out of the race after a private meeting with the senator. "We talked about a lot of things impacting the Indian people of South Dakota and I liked what I heard and decided that as long as Tom was putting all of these things on the table, it was not important that I stay in the race," Giago said.

"I am very grateful that Tom would take the time out of his very busy schedule in order to support our foundation. He is a regular subscriber to our monthly magazine, Indian Education Today, which we publish in Rapid City to support the foundation," Giago said.

The fundraiser is set for June 6, 2006 and will begin at 6:00 p.m. and run until 9:00 p.m.

"We are inviting many of our special business friends from Rapid City and so I hope they will keep an eye out for their invitations," Christy Tibbitts, executive director of the foundation, said.

Ten arrested for embezzlement on reservation

PIERRE (AP) -Ten people were arrested this week for embezzlement - accused of taking money intended for use in Standing Rock Indian Reservation's Antelope District in South Dakota, the FBI says.

The suspects, responsible for handing out tribal funds, were nabbed by authorities last Monday and Tuesday and at least seven were ordered to appear in federal court in Aberdeen, said Stephen Pluta of the FBI in Sioux Falls.

The Department of Interior's Office of Inspector General and the Aberdeen FBI office continue an investigation.

The amount of money involved has not been released.

The Standing Rock reservation runs along the North Dakota-South Dakota border.

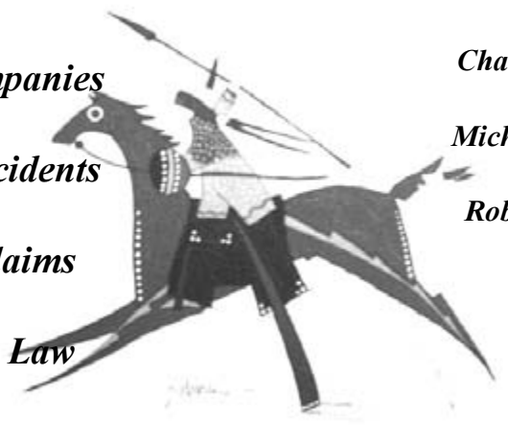
ANTELOPE - The Brownie Girl Scout Troop 7101 of Antelope Community collected hundreds and hundreds of stuffed animals of all sizes types to donate to local charities.

Pictured is the Brownie Troop 7101 with their donations as they give them to a representative of Rosebud Ambulance Service.

The Brownies decided to collect stuffed animals as part of their duty to show sisterhood and generosity according to the "Girl Scout Law." They wanted to give stuffed "friends" to other children who may be sad, scared or hurt.

The collected donations were taken by the Brownies to White Buffalo Calf Woman Society Shelter in Mission, Spotted Tail Crisis Center in Rosebud and Rosebud Ambulance Service to be distributed to children served by each of these facilities.



It is the Brownies' hope that the stuffed toys might offer some comfort to each child as they arrive at the shelter, group home, or while they ride on the ambulance.

Many people came forward with generous donations to help the girls. The Brownies would especially like to thank Okreek Community for their generous donation, Antelope Community for housing the donations, Todd County Tribune and Wells Fargo Bank for agreeing to be collection points and all the people that came forward to donate.

Little Wound corrals Platte for Region 7A win and 5th state tournament trip

Red Cloud finishes 16-6 season with loss in Region 8A

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

PIERRE - Little Wound and Platte met in a rematch of this year's Snowball Classic in Winner back in December; Platte definitely improved enough throughout the season to win the District 13A tourney 61-53 over Todd County last week but the Mustangs had done their own bit of improvement and stampeded the Black Panthers 87-61 to win the Region 7A title Tuesday in Pierre and earn a trip to the State A tourney this week in Sioux Falls.

Team basketball and balanced scoring has helped Little Wound become an offensive juggernaut over the last five games as they have averaged 99 points a game compared to their opponents 57. Tuesday was no different at Pierre Riggs high school as five Mustangs hit double figures.

"This team is peaking at the right time," said Jamie Feather Earring, Little Wound's head coach, "we took care of the ball tonight, moved it around to the open man and forced Platte into 21 turnovers with our pressure defense."

Devon Lebeau set the tone by hitting a couple of big threes right off as the Mustangs took an 18-11 first quarter lead and did not let up in the second quarter as both Brice Hornbeck and Shilo Pierce joined in the Little Wound three point barrage by hitting threes as the Mustangs pushed their lead to 46-26 at the half. Little Wound hit ten threes in the game on the way to knocking down 33 of their 65 shots in an offensive display, shooting 51 per cent from the field.

The teams played close to even up in the third before Little Wound finished the game with a flourish winning it by

McCauley moves from Lower Brule to Pierre, helps lead Governors to State AA Tournament

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

PIERRE - Last year, TJ McCauley, a sophomore guard at Lower Brule, led the Sioux to four straight wins over Class A schools including an upset victory over St. Thomas More in the championship game of the 2005 Lakota Nation Invitational, earning the MVP award along the way. This year, McCauley moved a bit north to Pierre, played football for the Governors and during the basketball season became the starting point guard on a team that finished the regular season at 16-3 with a number one ranking in the AA polls

"TJ has made the transition to Pierre and Double A basketball," said Terry Becker, head boy's basketball, "he has been a great addition to our team, playing football in the fall helped and even though there were times I think he thought about returning home to Lower Brule, he made it through the rough times."

A year ago, TJ and Lower Brule lost to a tough Sully Buttes team in the District 6B championship game, last week Pierre defeated Aberdeen Central 60-45 and the defending AA champs Mitchell 60-48 to win District 3AA and earn the number one seed in this week's State AA tourney in Rapid City, Against Aberdeen, McCauley hit two threes on the way to 12 points, grabbed four rebounds, had five assists and a couple of steals. The next night in a close game with Mitchell, TJ was one of three Governors in double figures scoring 16 with eight of those coming in the fourth quarter of a close game.

"It is different this year in Pierre, last year I was the main scoring threat at Brule so I have had to make an adjustment," said TJ McCauley, a junior at Pierre Riggs high school, "sometimes I feel like I haven't contributed enough like the game with Aberdeen but really it has meant getting used to a different role on this team; we have two good post players on this team so the first goal is to go to the big guys."

According to TJ, he started the first game this year as the USDA supplemental commodity cuts could affect Lakota elderly

BY ARCHIE B. BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - President Bush's proposed 2007 federal budget will most likely have an impact on the USDA supplemental commodity program that many elderly qualify for on the Oglala Sioux reservation. Many on a fixed income have come to count on it on a monthly basis and cutting it will result in yet untold consequences.

On the Rosebud, it is often difficult to tabulate an accurate count when it comes to the census. That difficulty also extends to the elderly as Sicangu tribal members are sometimes leery of being surveyed and researched without good cause.

Bernard Herman of the RST commodity program noted that Rosebud does not participate in the USDA supplemental commodity program, and thus, they will not be affected by the proposed cuts in Bush's budget. The total number of tribal members who are served by the program amounts to some 2,400 people with half being the elderly.

The Sicangu Wicoti Awayankapi or RST tribal housing authority has recently embarked on an accurate census survey of the reservation in order to document an accurate count. Higher numbers than currently being used in official documents could result in increased housing funds and other grant funding opportunities. That was the case on the Pine Ridge reservation last year when the tribe was able to arrive at an official census that was higher than originally thought.

The USDA supplemental commodity program is funded at $120 million and feeds over a half million people nationally, many elderly.

In proposing to cut the program, the federal government says that the supplemental program essentially duplicates other food programs, such as food stamps.

27 points. LeBeau led the Mustangs with six threes and 25 points, Hornbeck hit two threes on the way to 18 points, Rich Big Boy helped with 16, Michael Apple chipped in 12 and Pierce finished with two threes and 10 points. Platte finished their season at 12-10 and had two in double figures, Keith Cutler with 26 and Colin Ringling with 17.

For Little Wound, seeded seventh, it is the fifth time for the boys to qualify for the state tournament. Dave Archambault, Brice Hornbeck's grandfather, led the Mustangs to the B tourney as head coach in 1980 and 83 and Dusty LeBeau, Devon's father, coached Little Wound to consecutive fourth place finishes in 1999 and 2000.

Clark, Little Wound's first round opponent, is making their 16th trip to a state tourney, 13 times in the B and qualifying for the A for the third time in five years, taking second in 2004.

The 2006 State A opens at the Sioux Falls Arena on Thursday, March 16th with the number one seed, St. Thomas More 23-0 taking on the number eight seed, Sisseton 13-10 at 12 noon mountain time. This is the Cavaliers third straight trip to the State A and have been ranked number one in Class A since the preseason poll came out in early December.

Parkston, 19-4 takes on the 18-5 Lennox in the second game at 1:45pm. Clark, 22-0 against Little Wound 16-6 open the night show at 6pm and the first round wraps up with the 2004 State A champ, Chester Area 18-5, taking on the 19-4 Chamberlain Cubs.

"We need to keep playing with the same intensity that we have shown as a team over the last five games," added Feather Earring, "we need to play tough pressure defense and on offense continue to play unselfishly, finding the open man and take advantage of the transition game when possible and play patiently when in a half court game."

St. Thomas Moore ends Red Cloud's season in Region 8A

RAPID CITY - St. Thomas More hit 30 of their 49 shots Tuesday night in their Region 8A championship game at the Rushmore Plaza Civic Center, a hot 61% from the field while Red Cloud hit 15 of 51 for 29% as the Cavaliers won their 23rd straight game this season 64-37 to earn their third straight trip to the State A tourney this week at the Arena in Sioux Falls.

Dylan Wince, a senior shooting guard, hit a deuce and two treys in the first quarter to help the Cavaliers to a 19-10 lead then Zack Finley, a 6'9" senior center hit four straight field goals in the second as St. Thomas More increased the lead to 31-14 at the half.

Working hard against the Cavalier defense, Red Cloud's top scorer, Johnny Crow hit a three in the first quarter and a free throw and two field goals in the second but St. Thomas More covered him hard and worked at wearing him down.

"It felt like I had a new defender with fresh legs on me every two minutes," said Crow, "they play very physical, they are big and strong and deep, it was a learning experience."

"Yes, we focused on both Crow and Christian McGhee and the team's defense made it tough, they had to earn every basket," said Dave Hollenbeck, Cavalier head coach, "and on offense we had a good outside inside game going as Wince opened up the inside for Finley to score down low in the lane."

Finley finished with 25 points and 13 rebounds, Wince chipped in 10 points. Crow led Red Cloud with 10 points and shared rebounding honors with sophomore Dave Giago with five apiece. Coming into the regional championship game, the Crusaders had won nine of their last ten games and finished the year off at 16-6.

"This was a great team to work with, they worked hard every day and supported each other throughout the season," said Matt Rama in his third year as head boy's coach at Red Cloud, "the parents and supporters were fantastic and after the loss to St. Thomas More they stood outside the locker room and applauded each player as they came out for the last time this year, it was a great way to let the team and the coaches know they really appreciated the team and the year we had."

Crow, Eugene Giago, Dallas Nelson and Gary Richrds graduate this year but a solid nucleus will be back including junior Chris Red Bear and sophomores McGhee, Giago, Lester Gotheridge and Billy Scott.

two guard and from the second game on has played the point guard position.

"My teammates had to get used to my passing, I hit some of them in the head when they weren't prepared for a pass or had it bounce off of their chest or arm or even their hands," McCauley said, "all of us have had to make some adjustments.".

Transferring to Pierre has meant a tougher academic regimen, a challenge McCauley has readily accepted to get better prepared for going to college after graduation.

"Getting an opportunity to get a good education with a solid academic foundation means a lot to me," said McCauley, "I want to go on to college and play ball while I get a college education but that means you really have to focus on you r school work every day, I struggled in the beginning but its been getting better each quarter."

TJ's older brother, Derrick, made a similar move from a small school to a larger AA school. Their father, Ted, was a senior at Northern State University in Aberdeen and he encouraged Derrick to move from Waubay to Aberdeen Central. After three years at Waubay and earning a third team all state nod as a sophomore and first team all state as a junior, Derrick transferred to Aberdeen Central in the fall of 2003 and helped them to the State AA tourney in Rapid City and a fifth place finish earning first team all state honors along the way

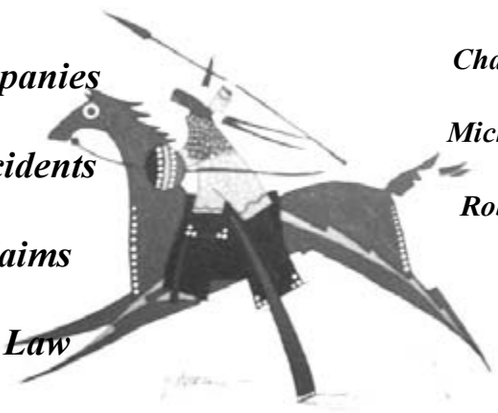
"No one made this decision for him," said Ted McCauley who moved back to Lower Brule after graduating from Northern State, "he decided that going to Pierre was the best thing for him and his future; originally we thought maybe a year at Pierre and then I would go back to graduate school and he would go on to Aberdeen Central but it seems like such a good fit here in Pierre that he'll stay here for his senior year. The coach has been more than fair and everyone has appreciated TJ's contribution."

Doug White Bull originally coached TJ as a sixth grader in Lower Brule and as head coach of Lower Brule last year welcomed the chance to coach him again.

"When he was a sixth grader, we went to a tournament and won it, he hit nine threes in the championship game," said White Bull who left Lower Brule and assisted in McLaughlin this year, "TJ is a complete player, he has really worked hard on his basic skills and fundamentals and has developed his game, he shoots with either hand, has good body control, plays very unselfish and plays at both ends of the floor, both offense and defense - he adds to any team he plays on and I wasn't surprised at his transfer to Pierre. While living for three years in Aberdeen while his father was in school, he was involved in a lot of different activities in and out of school and there's not a lot to do after school in Lower Brule and using his older brother as an example he is looking ahead to laying a foundation for college and college ball, I really admire him for that."

Mike Stroup, athletic director at Pierre, commented that TJ has been a wonderful asset to the school overall and to the team that he has made a good transition.

"He has done all that we have asked of him and more," said Becker looking back over the year that will wrap up with the State AA tourney in Rapid City, "I know we asked him to handle a different role on this team and he's done it and spending a year with Michael Tveidt, a great student athlete who has signed with North Dakota State, has been a good experience for him as he looks ahead to his own senior year and to his future after graduating high school."



After earning the number one seed in the AA tourney this week, Pierre faces Mitchell in the first round at noon on Thursday, a team that the Governors beat in the 3AA final a week and a half ago and a team that is the defending AA champ. For Pierre, it was their first ever District 3AA championship. For Coach Becker it is his second straight trip to the State AA after coaching Dell Rapids St. Marys to the State B championship in 2004. Pierre finished fifth last year.

"Being away from my family and not seeing them every day is the hardest part about the move," said McCauley who lives with his uncle in Pierre, "its been great to play before a packed house every game, that really energizes you. In order to put my game where I can play with these guys, I've had to work really hard in practice and being ranked number one only means that we as a team have to go out and play our game every time we are on the floor, let's

Overtime loss in Regionals closes out Williston State Lady Teton season

Big Crow named MVP of Mon-Dak Conference

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

WILLISTON, N.Dak. - Williston State hosted the National Junior College Athletic Association Region 13, District J Division I Women's basketball tournament on Saturday as the Lady Tetons took on Iowa Western in a semi final game. Iowa Western won the first half, Willistion won the second half and the overtime period went to Iowa Western as they won it 89-85.

Down by as many as 16 in the first half, Laura Big Crow, a sophomore from Pine Ridge, scored 16 of her game high 30 points in the second half as the Lady Tetons went up by seven, 76-69 with 3:11 to go in regulation. WSC struggled with turnovers the entire game, they had 25 overall, and turned it over three times in the last two and a half minutes to let the Lady Reivers back in and finish 78 all in regulation. Offensive rebounds and turnovers told the story as Iowa Western played strong on the offensive boards and Williston turned the ball over in the last two minutes to give Iowa Western a 89-85 win.

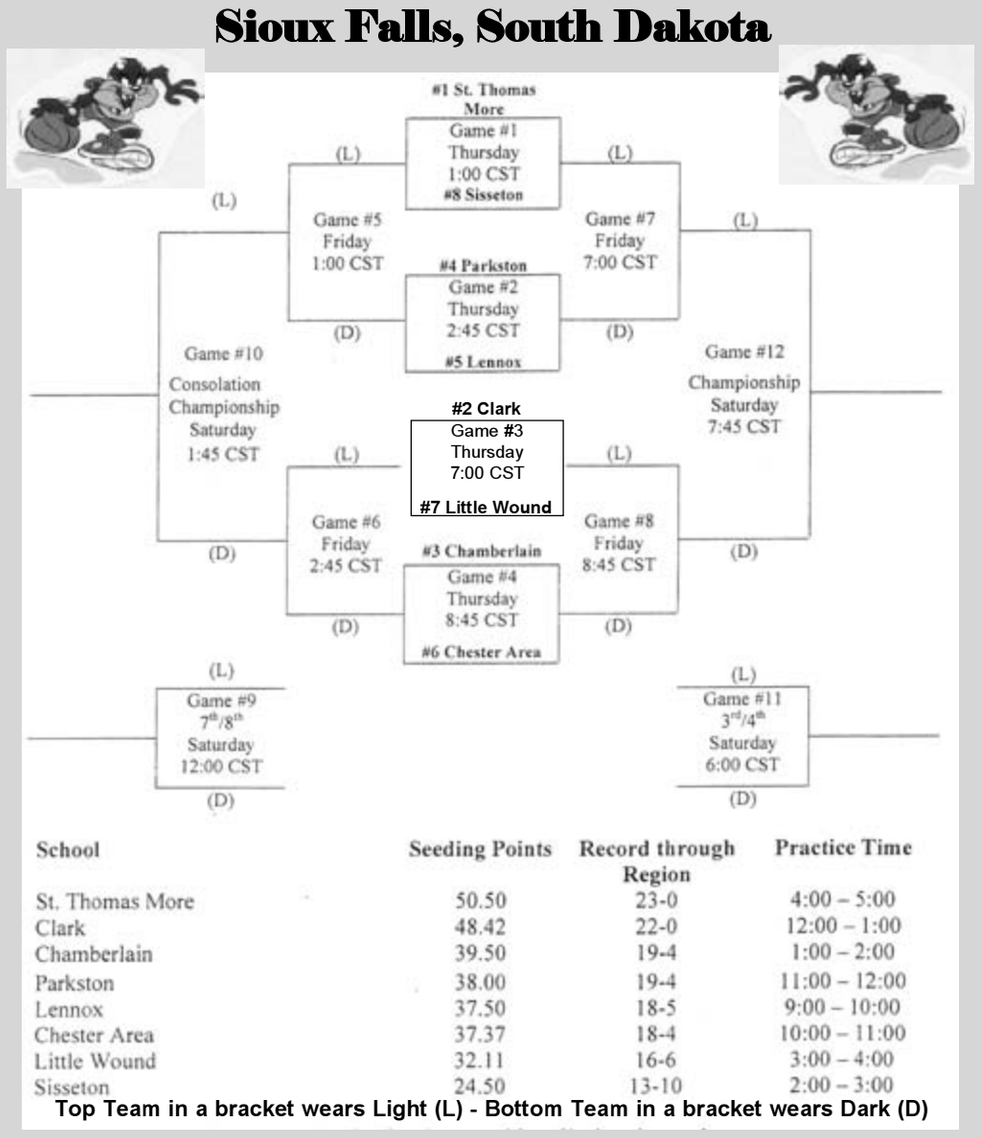
For the second year in a row, Iowa Western knocks the Lady Tetons out of the regionals and a shot at the nationals. Lake Region State College, the regular season Mon-Dak conference champs, clobbered North Dakota State College of Science 92-58 in their semi final game and came back in the finals to beat Iowa Western 79-67 for the Region title and a trip to the nationals.

Williston State finished the year at 22-8 and a second place finish in the conference. Big Crow finished with 30 points in her final game as a Lady Teton.

"At the beginning of the year I just didn't know if I could handle the main focus of the offense," said Big Crow who provided the bulk of the inside part of the Lady Tetons inside/outside game, "we developed into a good inside/outside team as Lacy Heier, Jamie Wheeler and Kayla Barenthsen all were threats from three point range."

For the season, Big Crow, averaged 22 points a game and 9.7 rebounds and on Thursday, she was named the MVP of the Mon-Dak conference. Schools participating in the conference include: Williston State, Lake Region State College, Bismarck State College, Dawson Community College, United Tribes Technical College, Miles Community College, Minot State University-Bottineau and North Dakota State College of Science.

"She anchored our inside game all year long, handling the scoring and working hard on the boards," said Hunter Berg, Williston State coach, "she's a 5'10" post and she had to adjust to a number of players taller than her, she had a great year."



With her season cut short and a lost opportunity to go to nationals with the overtime loss in the semis of the region, Big Crow now has to sort through offers from four year schools as she looks ahead to the second half of her college basketball career. Schools as far away as Georgia have expressed interest in the Pine Ridge native.

SDSU finishes second Division I season with two California games

Casey saves best game of roller coaster year for last

FULLERTON - In a season which started at Rupp Arena in Lexington, Ken. and Assembly Hall in Champaign, Ill and ended up with a two game California swing, the South Dakota State University Jackrabbits came up short in their last game losing to Cal State Fullerton 95-82 on March 5 finishing their second year in DI with a 9-20 record.

After four minutes, Scott Nagy, SDSU head coach said his team needed a wakeup call and he put a new five into the game.

"Mackenzie Casey was the leader of the team on the floor and he had to play aggressive," said Nagy, "when he plays aggressive he is a good ballplayer and other times he is passive and just trying not to make mistakes."

Casey quickly hit a three and gave SDSU their only lead of the game 9-6, he added another three and a two in the first half and after cranking up the team's energy level a bit, Nagy returned the starters, SDSU was down by 12 at the half 46-34 and even though they hung around all game the Jacks ended up loing it by 13, 95-82.

Matt Cadwell, a 6'3" red shirt freshman, led the team with 27 points and set a new SDSU scoring record for freshman with 453 points averaging 15.6 points a game this year, he also set a new record playing 1,056 minutes over the season.

Ben Beran finished with 19 points and eight rebounds, Michael Loney added 12 and Casey chipped in a season high 10 points, going two for two from three point range. Casey also helped with two rebounds, two assists and two steals in 16 minutes.

Cal State had five ballplayers score in double figures; they beat SDSU by 12 earlier in the season in Brookings and by 13 on their home floor on Sunday.

SDSU's second season included the loss of their top scorer to a torn ACL at the end of November and the suspension of their two top rebounders at the end of January and included the addition of four members of the SDSU football team.

The 9-20 season included eight wins over Division I opponents in a season that included six games with teams that made the NCAA tourney this year including Kentucky, Illinois, Marquette, Utah State, University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee and San Diego State as well as four teams playing in the NIT, Manhattan, Nebraska, Butler and Minnesota.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

What do you see for our (Lakota, Dakota, Nakota) people in the future as far as sovereignty is involved?

In my future, what am I going to do as far as love and financial abilities are involved? Am I psychic? Did I really talk to him and his warriors in my dream? I am thank you for your reply.

Andrew

Dear Andrew,

Thank you for asking. I do see a time when the Lakota, Nakota, Dakota people stand as a Unit of One, Unified Nations. I do see a time when these peoples (hereafter referred to as The People) tear away their dependency on the understood U.S. government, except as Sovereign States would create an entirely open boundary, not to be broken by duress. I do see a time, that within The People the Spirit is of Tunkshila and the Red Road, by design.

I do see within The People a process based on tradition but realized in the contemporary world. The process is hard. To be as one, and independent, first each person must heal their own individual internal government. They must heal their injuries and wounds and reaffirm their belief in themselves as strong independent governments, then the respect that is inherent in birthright of a nation will be realized in unified government.

The pathway must be agreed on as a target, and must be perceived and conceived in the light of balance without jealousy and fear. All nations must agree to at first talk. All sides should be heard. Governments, remember, are not the bosses; but the servants. It is when they forget their place that they are dissembled.

Yes, how does it feel? Don't believe it yourself? Learn to be objective, not to ask a question with a predetermined view of "how you think it should be," don't listen to "fear based" answers, determine source(s) of information, pray a lot, bless yourself a lot, go to sweat, use a ton of sage, and constantly release "outcome." Also, everybody, by the way, has their own symbology, internal language in the connection to the Creator.

Learn what yours really is to you. Be truthful with yourself 100 percent of the time. For instance, once when I looked at this guy I saw a box of rocks and a microphone. He, of course, was a rock musician. But, if I had interpreted it incorrectly, I could have seen him being "stoned" while he was singing, or being stoned, as in hated, by the crowd. Remember, everyone creates and draws to them that which they need, in order to enrich their own lives with wisdom, love, and of course the combination of those two: the true relationship with the Creator. Remember, everything IS in Divine Order. Always start from there.

Then you can begin to solve the mystery as to what it means. For our world's reality is actually a healing realm. If you keep doing the same bad thing, the same bad thing will happen to you ...OR...change what you are doing and change the outcome. Do good things and .....guess what?

Yes. Crazy Horse and Sitting Bull are very close to the Lakota, Nakota and Dakota people right now. The veil between the Spirit World and the physical world is thinning. There is much concern as to outcome from the Spirit World. They are protecting and guiding. The Great Ones Are Here. It is because we are all on the cusp of change. People need to wake up, and so the Spirits of the Great Ones are on the team to kick butt until everyone wakes up.

Dear Anna,

A close relative was violently killed in the sanctuary of his home. He loves people and had many many friends and relatives. He was kind and welcomed people into his home when they had little else.

I'm hurt and the family is reeling from it. I can't stop thinking about how he struggled and fought for his life so he could be with his family.

Is he okay? Will we ever have closure? Can you give more insight into what happened and is the person wanted the right one? I

I will NOT be at peace until justice is served. God says he loves everyone equally but how could He allow people to suffer so?

Hurt and Reeling

Dear Hurt and Reeling:

Yes, he is okay. I know this is hard, but this wonderful man gave his life (at the soul level (i.e. an agreement with the Creator)) unselfishly, to help others.

His sacrifice is not about killing the one that did this to him, but stopping anyone from ever being that sick and killing another soul. It is a cry to heal the illness of alcoholism and drug addiction that robs a person of his Spirit and his humanity. It is a lesson to become aware. It is a Seven Generation Lesson. He was a sheep and he was slaughtered. It was a generous gesture. Please don't misread it through the angered response of rage moving into vengeance.

You can certainly make having no peace your reality a goal, but believe me, when you are more knowledgeable than God, then you will have earned that right. Until then, trust that his death has been noticed, and while "senseless" it is not without value and honor. The lesson is to prevent senseless murder by respecting the body, mind and Spirit. Say no to alcohol and drugs. See what it does. Call it out and call it by name. Do not encourage co-dependency. Take back your power.

This wonderful man stands beside you now, when you grieve. He says he did not suffer too much, but will now be there for those that love him to help them. He won't leave his nephews and nieces behind. He won't leave his sisters and brothers. He prays for understanding. Please understand, he gave his life to save the children.

Dear Anna,

I have a few question for you, to start I am going to curt here real soon and I am a little worried on the outcome. I am afraid that they are going to take my baby girl away, and give her back to her real mom. I don't want her to have to go to that type of enviroment; it isn't a good home for a child to have to grow up in. I try my best to be a good mom and I know that there are things that I can do better, but I am only human and I make mistakes just like everyone else. I don't know why she wants her back now she has never bothered to see her and now she wants her. Does she even know how that would affect the child? My other question is right now I am a little confused with my life; I have a job but I am not sure if I want to continue working here. Sometimes I feel that I am the only one that does anything and I don't like the fact that things are always being pushed off on me to get done. I feel that I am a good worker and I catch on fast to things and there are days that I feel like alot of things are being blamed on me when I really have no part in it.

I get along with my boss but there are days that I don't like her very much and I feel that she asks a little too much of me.

I am I wrong for this? I feel that I am stuck here and really have no choice but to stay and work. I don't have my high school Diploma or GED and I am afraid that I won't find a another job that pays me good because of this fact. I don't know what to do can you please let me know what you see happening for me?

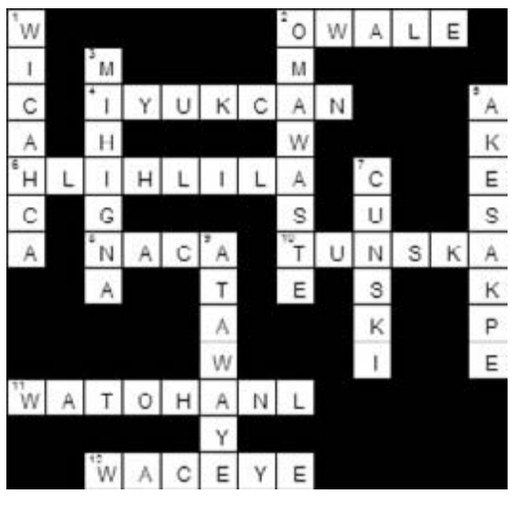
Thank you very very much for your time Anna

Dear You're Welcome for my time:

There is a very real chance that the baby will have at least some visitation allowed with the birth mother. Due to other areas of concern that I see, it is not likely that you will lose custody - on that note; please talk to an attorney.

At your work, well the thing about working for somebody is that you do whatever you need to do to get paid. I have always found that if I do my best it makes me feel better.

I kind of like it that my best is usually a whole lot better than anybody else's mediocrity. If you are comparing what others do with what you contribute, and slow down what you do, who will look better? Don't quit your job because you work harder than everybody else. Work harder and know you do.



It is called self respect. Go back to school. You really need to protect your future. You will almost always have to work, so why not earn more money.

It isn't that people that have jobs that are directly tied to education work any harder than those without an education, it is that those without an education generally work ten times as hard to make half as much. Figure it out. Take a math class.

Grandma, I miss you, it's been three years since you left me, I miss all the fun we used to have, I miss the hugs and the way you always made things better. You were always helping me and my little brother, you always protected us, took up for us and made sure no one hurt us.

You were the best Grandma. I will always keep your memory forever in my heart.

I love you grandma, your takoja, Shantay Rose Janis

We will never forget you grandma, you were the best grandma ever.

Shanay Rose, Shantay Rose and Jordan Rashawn Janis.

In loving memory of Walter 'Sage' Young

March 13, 1922 to October 27, 2002

He was born along the Little White River, just west of what is now known as the White River Project, to which area he returned 74 years later, living there for several years, before moving to Martin town.

A Lakota cowboy, working with cattle most of his life.

In the U.S. Navy, when he and brother Ray joined in November of 1942. Sage served aboard PC 1243, a convoy escort ship, protecting transport ships departing U.S. harbors to Europe from German submarines knows the the "Wolf Pack," which patrolled the U.S. coastline, seeking to destory as many ships as possible. When the war in Europe was over, he was sent to the Pacific side of World War II, where he served until the end of the war. He was a radioman 2nd class. He was honorably discharged in November 1945. He was a charter member of the American Legion Post 269 of Wanblee.

In constructions, working on the bridge on Little White River south of Kadoka and other highway work.

Always returning to working on cattle. Although he was nearing retirement age, he still held jobs with Dale Cady, along the Niobrara River in Nebraska.

Keen in wit, and had the (as one man put it) "deadly" sense of Indian humor, using it to make people laugh and think. He chastized the tribal council via a letter to the editor about the 'golden cows' which had all disappeared. He once told his step granddaughter Frankie that a study showed that caffeine killed lice and said, "So, Frankie, if you ever get bugs, drink lots of coffee."

Was romantic, never forgetting a person's birthday, always buying grandchildren a gift or a card for someone who lost a loved one.

Regarded highly by many people, some of whom named their children specifically for him. There is a whole generation of children named 'Sage' both boys and girls

Was many things, probably the most important that his spiritual life increased and at the end, despite his own pain and sorrow, he was doing what his Creator required. 'to love mercy, and to walk humbly with your God.'

He is remembered and loved by his family in Martin and Rapid City.

Spring storm brings change

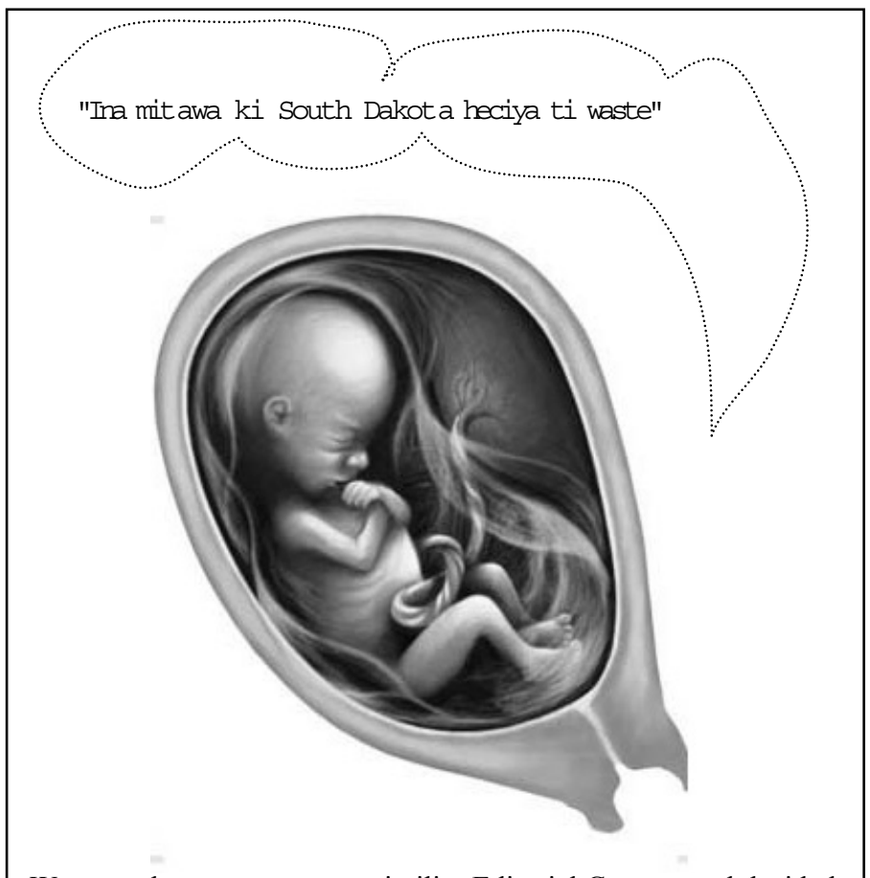
The powerful March snow storms can be seen as a time that "Unci Maka" chooses to cleanse the earth and provide some much needed moisture in time for the spring planting and the planting of trees.

It signals yet another change in the influential forces that Lakota people will confront as we look over the horizon and see what issues are most significant to our survival.

The departure of Gale Norton as Interior Secretary and the appointment of the new head signals an adjustment period for tribal nations.

In a couple of the articles about Norton's resignation there was little mention of her predicament in dealing with the individual Indian monies accounting scandal and the Cobell suit.

One has to wonder why, as many are now editorializing that the federal government should simply admit fault and settle the issue.



The final accounting is not in yet, on the impact that President Bush's budget will have on the Lakota community, however we know that funds for urban Indian health centers and the Johnson O'Malley program are history. We have to applaud the efforts of Senator Tim Johnson as he sponsored a measure seeking to restore one billion dollars for Native American funding.

Of course it was defeated in the Senate, but his efforts are noteworthy.

The same sentiment to Senator John Thune as he worked very responsibility in helping to get the COPS grant refunded.

Finally, with the Ambrahamoff scandal coming to light, many tribal nations are now utilizing their own people to lobby in Washington and that effort could get expensive for the smaller tribes.

Perhaps, the proposed creation of a Native American embassy in the nation's capital will allow a home base from which many tribes will be able to do some of their fieldwork.

We recently came accross a similiar Editorial Cartoon and decided to come up with a Lakota version of our own.

Thoughts that come from the heart

A humorous view of weather and technology

This past weekend was cool. We got snow and it was great. Lately our winters have been sparse with moisture. Our seasons are changing, slowly but they are changing. It is inevitable. That's how Unci Maka Mother Earth has been for millions of years, she changes with time. The last several winters seemed bleak without the moisture we usually get from big snow falls. When that happens we get concerned with the nourishment of Mother Earth and when it finally snows like it did this past weekend, it gives one a joyful feeling despite the hardships of what the cold snow brings.

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

Historically, as Lakota people we cling to our spiritual connection to the Earth and we honor what the Earth provides to mankind. It also obligates us to respect the actions of Mother Earth and we respect Her. It should be a connection that is felt by all mankind but it isn't.

With the snowfall, I read several articles in local news outlets where the farmers and ranchers are excited by the snowfall and that is because their economy comes from what Mother Earth produces.

"Lakota heuncapi ca, icamna hantas he upiya unglonihanpi. Ogna wasme eyas he dokasni. Unci Maka ki mni unkup hantas hecela waste."

The last really big snow that I remember is when the drifts were so big that I waded through the snow up to my thighs to get to the highway. That was eight years ago.

It was November 1998 and when my mother died there was so much snow.

She already had a heart condition and got sick from congestion. The snowstorm came and we had difficulties getting back and forth from the hospital because of the storm. We buried her with snow all around.

When it snows like it did this past weekend, it reminds me of that time. I thought of her wisdom and her knowledge that she passed on and her legacy in her children. When we knew her illness would eventually get the best of her, we stayed close to her as much as each of us could.

I wanted to keep something of her and I would sit and talk with her. It was so enjoyable to me when she would talk of long ago. I could spend hours and hours listening to her stories. She would talk about how she grew up and how different times were at that time and would share that wisdom. She shared and managed to link the past with the present and brought forth a lesson from it.

She wrote a journal and now when I miss her at times like this past weekend, I read her journal. She wrote of how in a time long ago, her grandparents (Philip Slow Dog and Mary Wears White from north of Allen) knew the signs of impending weather from reading the environment. It took years of surviving seasons to know those signs.

Today it takes a quick interaction with technology by watching the weather reports on television or tuning in on the radio or logging on to the weather and the doppler radar through Internet, punching in 511 on our cells phones to hear up to the hour road conditions.

My mom had a sense of humor that I loved and she was good in making sense of change.

Life doesn't stay the same, change happens and how we move with it will determine our own contentment.

She used to joke about the technology age in her efforts to understand the transition from what she was used to, to what was available today. That ranged from understanding how the recording on voice mails or how message machines worked to computers, satellites, and the almighty microwave. She would joke about learning the mechanisms of the technology age.

Recently I came across a joke that I knew she would have enjoyed and I am going to share it here.

It was October and the Indians asked their new Chief if the coming winter was going to be cold or mild. Since he was a Chief in a modern society he had never been taught the old secrets.

When he looked at the sky he couldn't tell what the winter was going to be like. Nevertheless, to be on the safe side he told his tribe that the winter was indeed going to be cold and that the members of the village should collect firewood to be prepared. But being a practical leader, after several days he got an idea.

He called the National Weather Service and asked, "Is the coming winter going to be cold?" "It looks like this winter is going to be quite cold," the meteorologist at the weather service responded.

So the Chief went back to his people and told them to collect even more firewood in order to be prepared.

A week later he called the National Weather Service again. "Does it still look like it is going to be a very cold winter?" "Yes," the man at National Weather Service again replied, "It's going to be a very cold winter. The Chief again went back to his people and ordered them to collect every scrap of firewood they could find.

Two weeks later the Chief called the National Weather Service again. "Are you absolutely sure that the winter is going to be very cold?" "Absolutely," the man replied. "It's looking more and more like it is going to be one of the coldest winters ever." "How can you be so sure?" the Chief asked.

The weatherman replied, "The Indians are collecting firewood like crazy."

This next one was one my mother told me.

There was a wasicu farmer who relied on an elder Lakota man to tell him of the impending weather. The Lakota man lived not far from his farm near a hill. He would take a gift to this Lakota man and ask him about the weather.

The Lakota man would walk up the hill and come back down and would tell the wasicu that it was going to rain or snow or whatever the weather was up to.

This went on for tona (many) years and one day, the wacisu man approached the Lakota man and asked of the weather and to his astonishment, the Lakota man said he couldn't tell him of the weather 'today.'

When the wacisu man asked why, the Lakota man said, "the batteries on my transistor radio are dead and so I can't take it up on the hill to listen."

Settle trust fund dispute

A REGISTER-GUARD EDITORIAL, EUGENE, ORE.

Published March 17, 2006

A decade has passed since Elouise Cobell sued the U.S. Departments of the Interior and Treasury on behalf of 500,000 Indians nationwide whose trust funds she claimed were criminally mishandled by the federal government.

Cobell, a banker and member of Montana's Blackfeet tribe, has prevailed at nearly every turn in court. But Interior and Treasury officials under the Clinton and Bush administrations have frustrated efforts to resolve the latest chapter in this country's shameful mistreatment of its native population.

Congress should correct this wrong by approving a reasonable settlement, one that a 2002 study warned could total anywhere between $10 billion and $40 billion.

Some historical background may be helpful: In 1887, a paternalistic U.S. government assumed control of Indian assets such as timber, oil and mineral deposits. Consistent with most of its dealings with the Indians, the government mishandled the federal Indian Trust Fund - so badly that Interior officials say they no longer can figure out how much money was misappropriated, stolen or just vanished.

Despite pressure to settle from Congress and the courts, Interior and Treasury officials have refused to seriously discuss a settlement. Now, Sens. John McCain, R-Ariz., and Byron Dorgan, D-N.D., are planning to introduce legislation that would mandate a settlement.

The amount of the proposed settlement is certain to give some lawmakers pause, but they should reflect on the government's 119-year history of mishandling Indian resources. They might also read the opening paragraph of an article that Cobell wrote two years ago:

"Imagine a bank that took your money on a regular basis, never gave you a statement, had no idea how much was supposed to be in your account and argued it has no responsibility to return your money to you or provide any information about your money.

"Now imagine that same financial institution is destroying the documents; routinely defying court orders; and lying in sworn statements and in the court."

Congress must act honorably and provide justice to American Indians, even if that justice costs billions of dollars.

Tunkasila guided us through the ground blizzard

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

In the spring of 1977 I was finishing off the semester on the faculty at Sinte Gleska College and an early spring ground blizzard caused a semi-tractor trailer to jack knife and block the road that connects Rosebud and highway 18. I was attempting to get home after work with professor Godfrey Loudner and a student who happened to jump in for the ride back.

I had just been admitted to Harvard University and I was hoping that nothing would inhibit my attendance in the fall. I made the wrong choice of taking a back road, but in the end the whole incident turned out fine and good fortune was realized.

The student's name escapes me, but the memory of that day does not. We returned to Rosebud and took a back road to what is known as the six-mile corner. It connects with the Lakeview road, which travels north and south and is graveled. We were successful in busting through a couple of minor snowdrifts, but happened to hit one that my old GMC pickup would not overcome. We could not get unstuck after repeated attempts and simply sat there as the wind howled and the sky was a pretty blue. It was not particularly cold, however, the temperature would have most likely dropped as the sun went down. Most people on the northern plains know that the temperature and the wind chill can be treacherous if one is not prepared. It is no wonder then, that there are not a whole lot of weather related deaths in this area, as most people know when to stay put.

To make a short story long, I was only wearing a corduroy dress coat and asked the professor if we could switch coats as he was wearing a hooded parka. He agreed and I struck out on foot south toward Lakeview school as I knew that there were farmhouses in that direction. I made the decision rather quickly to do that, as I knew that something had to be done. I came upon the house of Jim Epke who I did not know, but he was on the Todd County School Board at the time. Lakeview wasn't exactly the kind of place that was friendly to Lakota people over the years, but the Epkes were kind as he drove me back to my two companions and we picked them up.

As we sat and drank coffee in their living room, they called the Rosebud Search and Rescue unit and they came and pulled us back to Rosebud. To this day, I am forever thankful to the Epkes for helping us. I don't know if they even remember that incident, but their neighborliness ensured our safe return to warm shelter. It is the kind of compassion and concern that many people practice on the plains, especially when the chips are down.

The only thing I can say about such generosity of spirit is that we have an obligation to turn around and extend the same kind of generosity and helping hand to others. I think I have done that many times. When I was given my Lakota name, Nagik Sapa,by Lloyd B. One Star, Sr. and my war bonnet for serving in Vietnam I was told that I had to help others when asked. I do extend my services when asked and I usually do it willingly, especially for those who also extend their respect.

We spent the night at the old Spotted Tail agency building that used to be SGC in its entirety. I recall that everyone had a nice time visiting and getting to know each other better. Being a teetotaler, I can't say there were distilled spirits in the building, but something caused everyone to be happy in spite of the winter storm. The college was a much smaller place then and everyone seemed to like each other. I couldn't wait to earn my postgraduate training in Boston so I could return and make a difference.

I don't remember if Victor Douville was among the small group of stranded employees or students, but I do recall visiting with Arvol Looking Horse and remember trying to impress him with my burgeoning use of Lakota. I saw Arvol last fall at the Two Stike community center and he recalled that period of time, as he and sister, Martina, we students at the college.

With the spring storm that swept onto the northern plains this weekend, I am reminded of a simpler time when my life could have been in jeopardy. It was not to be, as tunkasila helped to guide me to safety.

Dr. Archie Beauvais (nagik sapa) Sicangu Lakota, is a decorated Vietnam Veteran with a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University. He resides on the Rosebud with his son Beaux and is also the proud father of Yvonne and Anthony.

Things to empower yourself

Saddened by the loss of two wonderful friends

By Patty Pourier

I have heard the term religious fundamentalist in the news when referring to the Christian Right and Islamic Terrorist.

What does "Religious Fundamentalist" mean?

According to Jimmy Carter in his 2002 Nobel speech it means "Since I am aligned with God, I am superior and my beliefs should prevail, and anyone who disagrees with me is inherently wrong' and the next step is ' inherently inferior.' The ultimate step is 'subhuman,' and then their lives are not significant."

How many people reading this article felt 'subhuman' because of being Native? Or because of being poor?

How many have judged others because they are not Native and treated them as 'subhuman'? Have you condemned others because they do not practice your type of religion, or are not of your race?

Maybe you have treated someone this way because they are not YOUR relatives, or do not go to YOUR school. I have felt this way and it feels awful to be treated subhuman.

Feeling superior in religious beliefs may not seem significant, however, murders, gangs and wars do not generally start over large things.

They start with smaller seemingly insignificant things that grow. Things like trying to control others to believe as we do, or treating others less than because of something they may not have any control over. It creates a "we" / "they". President Bush refers to the "axis of evil" and then "us". I think the "us" he is referring to are the Religious Right Fundamentalist - not all of America.

This is where the trouble starts. Sometimes the two sides have not taken the time nor care to try to understand each other. We have come to the point in America where it is acceptable to strike first, to take without authority or right.

Gangs do this for territory. The government did this when taking land from the Indians. And now we are doing it in the Middle East.

President Bush constantly reiterates how the views of the religious Christian right are the only true beliefs, they are superior and all others are less than.

He bases policy of the United States on this premise.

However, this is the same thing we are hearing from the Fundamentalist Islamic Terrorist. That we are the infidels, their religion is superior and we are evil.

And to oppose the Fundamentalist Religious Right has become un-American. I resent the fact that I am judged as un-American because I support the troops in Iraq and oppose the war. I do not believe in surpassing the peace process that America has tried to foster in the last 50.

I oppose the cost of war in American lives (over 2300) and American dollars (over $250 billion). A fraction of this cost could make substantial differences in our state and on our reservation.

I resent the fact some folks consider me non-Christian because of my political affiliation or because of my support of stem-cell research and limited abortion.

Isn't there a constitutional amendment against mixing church and state?

Politicians are starting to campaign for the fall elections.

We will undoubtedly hear politics from pulps AGAIN. Just as we have recently heard in South Dakota over the issue of abortion.

Wasn't our country formed and based on freedom of religion and to keep the state out of the church and vise versa?

I believe in God, America, and the US Constitution. I believe in treating others like I would like to be treated. I believe in allowing others to practice their beliefs, without harming or intruding on my beliefs. I believe in the peace process.

I believe all people are created equal regardless of race, color, religion, gender, national origin, age, disability or sexual orientation.

When I think of how women, Islam's, Indians, and homosexuals are being treated by the Oval Office, I am appalled.

When does it stop? It stops when we get out to vote, or run for election so we can have politicians that reflect America and its ideals.

South Dakota's abortion law

When Governor Mike Rounds signed HB 1215 into law it effectively banned all abortions in the state with the exception that it did allow saving the mother's life. There were, however, no exceptions for victims of rape or incest. His actions, and the comments of State Senators like Bill Napoli of Rapid City, SD, set of a maelstrom of protests within the state.

Napoli suggested that if it was a case of "simple rape," there should be no thoughts of ending a pregnancy. Letters by the hundreds appeared in local newspapers, mostly written by women, challenging Napoli's description of rape as "simple." He has yet to explain satisfactorily what he meant by "simple rape."

The President of the Oglala Sioux Tribe on the Pine Ridge Reservation, Cecilia Fire Thunder, was incensed. A former nurse and healthcare giver she was very angry that a state body made up mostly of white males, would make such a stupid law against women.

"To me, it is now a question of sovereignty," she said to me last week. "I will personally establish a Planned Parenthood clinic on my own land which is within the boundaries of the Pine Ridge Reservation where the State of South Dakota has absolutely no jurisdiction."

Strong words from a very strong lady. I hope Ms. Fire Thunder challenges Gov. Rounds and the state legislators on this law that is an affront to all independent women.

Notes from Indian Country

A book for all seasons and a challenge to the governor

By Tim Giago

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

What weighs nine pounds and is red all over? No, it's not a very large Indian baby. The question is always "spoken" so the sound "read" comes out "red." Of course, we all knew the answer to that question while still in elementary school. What's black and white and read all over? A newspaper, of course.

But the book that weighs nine pounds is a hefty, 1,120 pages book named "Tiller's Guide to Indian Country" and if you haven't seen it yet you really don't know what you are missing.

The book was first published in 1996, but with the fast changes taking place in Indian country the second and expanded version came out in 2005.

It was edited and compiled by Veronica Tiller, PhD, and a member of the Jicarilla Apache Tribe of New Mexico.

Using websites and shoe leather, Tiller set out to publish the most comprehensive list of Indian tribes, nations, villages, pueblos, and rancherias ever put into one book. In the foreword Tiller wrote, "In addition to the research and inquiries conducted from our offices, we also dispatched a small army of field researchers made up almost exclusively of my sisters and nieces to visit more than 220 reservations and Indian communities in the 'Lower 48' states. From treaty fishing grounds at the very mouth of the Klamath River in Oregon to the bottom of the Grand Canyon; from the Las Vegas-style Indian casinos of San Diego County to the tribal bison herds on the high plains of Montana and the Dakotas; and from the Florida Everglades to the island chain of the Penobscot River in Maine, we 'kicked the tires' of Indian country USA for this 2005 edition of Tiller's Guide."

I love this book because when Tiller gave it the name "Guide," she knew exactly what the book was about. It is a guide through Indian Country like no other. Pick any tribe in the United States or Alaska and if you want to know the size of the tribe, how many of its members have college degrees, what are its main sources of economy or what its basic language is, you will find it all in Tiller's "Guide to Indian Country."

As a publisher of a newspaper for many years I found this book to be the bible of my business.

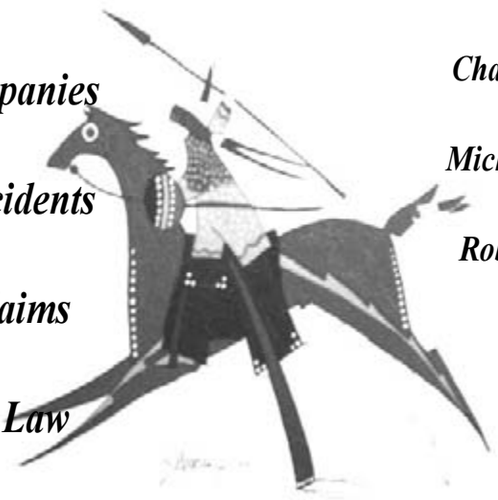
Just helping my writers find the correct spelling of an Indian tribe can be most difficult because many of the tribes spell out their names in their own language.

Every Indian nation is pinpointed on a map showing where it is located within the state.

The Guide will tell you the total land area of the tribe, the population and total enrollment and even how many people are in the workforce. Does the tribe have a casino? Does it have a high school? How about an Indian college? The answers to all of these questions are explained in detail. Oh yes, and the book is also beautifully illustrated.

I seldom tout any book or product unless I find it to be essential to Indian country. This book fills that bill.

I would highly recommend it to anyone working in Indian affairs, to every high school and college on and off the Indian reservations of America, and to all public libraries.



BowArrow Publishing Company of Albuquerque, NM publishes this book.

Gang activity assessed on the Rosebud

Gang like behavior of many Sicangu youth spark great concern

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Chris Cuestas of the National Violence Prevention Resource Center conducted an assessment of gang activity on the Rosebud Sioux reservation from October 11-14, 2004. The NVPRC of Tucson, AZ was contracted by the Aberdeen Area Mental Health office of the Indian Health Service to conduct the study.

Cuestas presented the report to the RST tribal council and copies were presumably available to the tribal membership. The assessment yielded information, which will serve as baseline data upon which future assessments may be built or against which a comparative analysis may be performed.

Cuesta has provided training for several entities on the Rosebud reservation, including presentations to area schools. The awareness building and sensitizing of the public to increasing gang activity on the Rosebud is very helpful as it informs the public of the potential impact of such activity.

The assessment essentially provides baseline data upon which future assessments may be built.

Cuestas conducted site visits to several communities and 772 respondents gave their opinion on several risk factors relative to the youth and which are affecting the Rosebud reservation. The influence of gangs, a lack of parental supervision, truancy, and substance abuse issues were the top four risk factors, which were identified as most significant. The lack of adult role models and a lack of cultural attachment were also described as problematic for the youth.

Meetings were held with community members and program personnel who were able to provide insight and perceptions about gang activity and youth violence. Data that was supplied by the schools, law enforcement, housing and the courts was used to enhance the suggested strategies to identify and increase awareness in order to pursue funding opportunities.

The report also included more than sixty interviews with community members from age ten to age 78. The field interviews revealed the fact that the youth fear for their safety and that the community sees gang activity as a serious problem. The adults interviewed expressed anger of the serious problem and a lack of attention to the Lakota culture and related traditions.

Some of the anecdotal comments from the three segments, elders, community, and the youth seemed to underscore the complexity of the problem. One elder said, "Give our elders airtime on our radio station to educate our parents and youth about our culture, traditions and responsibilities as tribal members." A community member said, "What is happening is the proof that our parents are failing in their jobs." Finally, one youth said, "Our so called role models are never around" while another, wrote, "It all starts with the examples that we have at home."

Cuestas also conducted observations of the community between the hours of 6:00 p.m. and 1:00 a.m. and in interviewing gang members it was revealed that they do not worry about being accountable for their behavior. Some members also said that they became involved in gang activity because their families held some animosity with other families. Many also were of the opinion that illegal sales of marijuana, methamphetamine, and prescription drugs were on the increase.

Focused interviews were also conducted with program personnel representing the tribal court, tribal leadership, probation, the Indian Health Service, the housing authority, chemical prevention, and the youth program.

Program personnel indicated that they recognized the gap in services to youth and a lack of coordination between the schools, local law enforcement, and youth-related services. Furthermore, this section of the report noted that program personnel would benefit from professional development, court administrative procedures and protocols, and an updated tribal code to oversee the youth.

Cuestas also documented 150 sites that indicated gang related graffiti. The power point presentation contained the number found from Spring Creek to Antelope and over to Parmelee. Such gang related markings could be indicative of the level of the maturity of the gang, while providing yielding information about past and future events, according to the study.

RST is currently dealing with an established and evolving youth gang problem and an active adult drug dealing influence, according to a major conclusion that came out of the report. An alarming statistic arrived at noted that 30-60% of the Rosebud youth population are engaged in some form of gang-like behaviors. There are at least 15 gangs in varying stages of sophistication and a greater concern is their connection to other larger jurisdictions and the influence of adult gang members.

Governor Rounds' approval rating plummets

PIERRE, SD - In a Survey USA poll released today, Governor Rounds' approval rating dropped from 72% in February, to 58% in March. The Governor's disapproval rating rose from 23% in February to 38% in March.

"The citizens of South Dakota understand that the Governor is not leading them in a positive direction," said South Dakota Democratic Party Executive Director Jason Schulte. "The clumsy effort to distance himself from the signing of controversial legislation and the failure of his legislative package are clear indicators of his inability to lead."

"South Dakotans are growing weary of a Governor who can't deliver on the meat and potato issues that effect their lives," Schulte continued. "Then they see the three million dollar mansion he built, and how he abuses taxpayer resources - this drop in approval was inevitable. South Dakota Democrats are going to continue to lead on core issues like education, better wages, and open government, and Governor Rounds' support is going to continue to drop."

Census Bureau starts test to improve count of American Indians

BY CHET BROKAW
AP News Bureau

EAGLE BUTTE, S.D. (AP) - American Indians living on reservations often pose a multitude of problems for census takers: They live in sparsely populated rural areas without regular addresses and often mistrust government officials.

As a result, the head count of Indians had some of the highest error rates for any minority group in the country. The Census Bureau wants to change that by the 2010 count - by making it personal.

The new methods include lobbying from tribal leaders and an emphasis on door-to-door visits by enumerators, rather than the mail form sent to most Americans.

``We know there was a huge undercount on the reservations, mainly because when they came to the reservations they didn't ask to come. They showed up uninvited," said Don Loudner, a member of the Crow Creek Sioux Tribe. ``If the Indian people don't know who you are, they aren't going to tell you nothing. They don't trust you."

Census Bureau Director Louis Kincannon arrived Wednesday on the Cheyenne River Sioux Indian Reservation for the formal kickoff of a project that will test the new counting methods for use on reservations across the nation.

Nearly all the enumerators who will visit houses are themselves residents of the Cheyenne River reservation, located in northern South Dakota, west of the Missouri River. One benefit is they know the terrain.

``Sometimes they are really hard to get to. You might need four-wheel drive," said Marjorie Gunville, an enumerator.

Counters who visit houses also will enter information into hand-held electronic devices that include Global Positioning System technology to identify the exact position of each household.

Tribal officials are encouraging residents to cooperate because an accurate count ensures that each tribe gets its fair share of federal funding for housing, welfare, health, day care and a wide range of other programs.

Many Indian people have been reluctant to disclose how many people live in their homes because houses in some government programs are supposed to hold only a certain number of people, Loudner said.

Publicity campaigns will emphasize that census information is confidential, so answers cannot be used to affect anyone's eligibility for government assistance programs, said Susan Lavin, the Census Bureau's regional director in Denver.

``We just keep harping on the need to cooperate," said Barbara Dupris, who has been handling publicity for the census test.

Tribal Chairman Harold Frazier also has written a letter encouraging people to cooperate, and that letter will be handed to the person who answers census questions for each household, she said.

All households will get only the short form, with only eight questions, which could prompt better cooperation. The long form, with 50 questions, will be done through monthly samples to get an ongoing detailed picture of the population.

In 1990, the Census Bureau estimates it missed about 4.5 percent of the American Indian population; the national rate was 1.6 percent. More alarming to the National Congress of American Indians is that an estimated 12.2 percent of all Indians living on reservations were missed.

The Census Bureau believes the reservation count improved in 2000, but it was still less accurate than the national average.

Kincannon planned to meet Thursday with officials of tribes from South Dakota, North Dakota and Nebraska before attending a ceremony marking the beginning of the only test on an Indian reservation before the 2010 census.

``This is to see if the things we plan to use are going to work," he said.

Santee Sioux Tribe celebrates return of jurisdiction

SANTEE, Neb. (AP) _ Law enforcement on the Santee Sioux reservation has run smoothly since the tribe took over jurisdiction of minor crimes committed by tribe members against other tribe members on the reservation.

``It's been pretty much the same - no major changes,'' said Waylon LaPlante, a patrol officer on the six-man squad. ``I try to make the highways safe. I have been averaging 130 miles a day on my patrol.''

The Department of Interior approved the request for retrocession _ reinstating criminal jurisdiction over the reservation to the tribe and federal government _ effective Feb. 16.

U.S. Attorney Mike Heavican attended a retrocession celebration Tuesday at the reservation, which is in northern Knox County.

He said the process is unique and ensures good law enforcement for the reservation.

``Before, it was difficult knowing who had jurisdiction _ the tribe, local government or federal,'' he said. ``Now, you don't have to make the decision immediately.''

In 1953, Congress adopted a law that gave five states, including Nebraska, criminal jurisdiction over certain crimes committed on American Indian lands.

The retrocession process started in May 2001, and for five years went through several legal processes, said Elmer Four Dance, special agent in charge for the Bureau of Indian Affairs district office in Aberdeen.

Over that five years, the Santee Sioux tribe worked with state and federal governments on cooperative agreements for law enforcement services, said tribal chairman Roger Trudell.

``Basically, the criminal and civil codes will be an adaptation of the state statutes. We will fine-tune it for the needs of our community and reservations,'' Trudell said.

Now, smaller crimes committed by Santee against Santee are subject to tribal jurisdiction, said Conley Schulte, attorney for the tribe. The federal government has jurisdiction of major crimes, such as murder or drug offenses.

In addition to that, smaller crimes committed by Indians against non-Indians could be subject to tribal court, but federal court could also have jurisdiction, Schulte said.

The tribe used a federal grant for law enforcement startup expenses, Trudell said.

The tribe has contracted with jails in South Dakota and Nebraska and has its own court and police force.

Under the agreement, Santee can take advantage of state and federal programs, said Heavican.

The Nebraska State Patrol will to work with Santee officials on the retrocession process, coordinating law enforcement service in the area, said Col. Bryan Tuma, the patrol's commander.

A sentencing date has not been set.

ASK ANNA

Psychic - Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I want to know how come I can't seem to hold onto any man? I just always seem to pick the wrong men. I want to get married, have babies...my clock is ticking.

Aren't men supposed to want to get married too? How come they all run when the word "relationship" pops up. Do you see me with a husband and babies?

Tick Tock

Dear Tick Tock:

You should have signed it 'desperate' instead of Tick Tock. Relax please. Breath...in...out... Men can smell desperation. It's like a claustrophobic all consuming smog. You have to get into balance girl. First of all, the relationships that don't work aren't supposed to.

Don't be untrue to yourself. Don't disguise who you are with a desperate woman's facade. Don't ever just "settle." Be okay. That's the first rule. Be okay. All those "don'ts" I gave you really all boil down to that.

Men that you are no longer "with" are not regrets, they are the road to travel to the understanding of love realized. They are another list of "don'ts."

I see you married. He is a cowboy type or has cattle and a ranch. He also works in a public or a 501-3(c) type of institution. He is around 40 years or so old (looks about that age anyway).

I do see children. I see two. I see a family picture taken of him and you and he is holding the little girl in a cowboy outfit, and you have the baby boy on your lap, and he has a cowboy hat along with a sheriff's pajama outfit on. It is charming. When? You want to know when? Well, the reason that it isn't now is because you are not okay, and he doesn't want to be with a woman that needs to be fixed, because that equals "needy."

Get it together girl, trust in the Creator that your equal is here on earth, wait and heal yourself from jealousy and insecurity. As you develop a stronger relationship to Source, or the Creator, Tunkasila, or God, the grace that is inherently in the female aspect of the Creator (also referred to as "goddess") is called into your being. It is part of your true Spirit.

The spirit of woman is not insecure, she is in grace. She knows that she is the moon, and that her brightness comes from the Sun (male).

She knows that she does not smother the Sun, but reflects his light back at him in cycles.

She knows that although he can create the Earth, he cannot affect the tide, and without Moon, all life dies. Now that, woman, is POWER. So 16 times as much power as the poor men have. And 16 times the emotional energy as a man. And 16 times more intuition as a man.

And 16 times the mental imaginings as a man...and that's not even mentioning the brain.

Give the men a chance, relax, teach them what love is...bring to him your gentle loving spirit. If he does not reflect his light on you in balance, working with your cycles, then he is not the man for you.

Dear Anna,

There is some real horrible gossip about our medicine man. One woman said she saw him doing something during a ceremony. Is it true?

Kind of afraid to ask

Dear Afraid,

No, unequivocally, absolutely and completely not true. The woman that said she saw this probably did "see" it, but not anywhere but in her head.

She might be under the influence of other medicine (from an antagonist, ho cikala) or having a psychotic or schizophrenic episode (this is western terminology for how doctors might describe her "vision)." Either way, however, she isn't using her good sense.

Her paranoia may have taken over, but if she can remember the truth about this medicine man, how very wonderful and good he is, then she can begin to heal herself from her misconception, and understand that somebody may be using her in a bad way. I feel very badly about this.

Please help your friend that said these things to see the truth, before everybody suffers what is absolutely unnecessary to suffer.

Dear Anna,

I am 12. I have two girlfriends, one on the Rez, and one in Rapid. I like them both. Sometimes I feel bad that I like both of them, but mostly I just like to like both of them. Will

I have to choose soon? Which one should I choose?

Got Two

Dear Got Two:

Since you are not officially "going" with either one of them it is okay to like both of them.

It is not okay to "go" with one, and string the other along. The best answer is to keep talking to both of them and liking them, because you are 12, and not "going" with either one.

I see you liking the girl that has long hair and sometimes wears it in braids the best. SO...you decide to tell the other one that you like her as a friend and that you have a new girl friend....then she will not talk to you for a while...but when she's older, and you are older too, then she and you will like each other again. Good luck

IHS, state prepare for bird flu

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The 'avian influenza' or bird flu has been getting a lot of media attention in recent months, including in the state of South Dakota and now on the Rosebud reservation. The current posturing by government officials and others is not to create any kind of panic, but to simply inform the public that such a public health concern is likely to become a reality if it is found that the bird flu is transmittable to humans.

The avian flu is something that occurs among birds naturally, while the seasonal flu among human occurs is contagious and is caused by influenza viruses. If the bird flu or other illness were to spread on a global scale it would be called a pandemic and currently there is no pandemic.

If history is any indication, officials are saying that it is not a question of if, but when, as there have been three pandemics in the last century. The bird flu is being carefully monitored, as it is suspect in some isolated cases where it has been transmitted from birds to humans. If there comes a time that it demonstrates an ability to be passed from human to human that is the time for great concern.

Domestic birds like turkeys, chicken and ducks can get the influenza virus by directly coming into contact with the secretions of wild birds and they may experience varying levels of illness and mortality. Early reports spoke of the bird flu originating in Vietnam and Thailand, and now it is being reported in the Middle East and a number of

ACLU files federal lawsuit against Winner School

SIOUX FALLS - The American Civil Liberties Union today filed a class action lawsuit in federal court against the Winner School District in South Dakota, charging that the District maintains an environment hostile to Native Americans by, among other things, disciplining Native American students more harshly than Caucasians and by forcing them to sign "confessions" for minor rule breaking, which often leads to juvenile court convictions.

"The treatment received by Native American students in Winner and throughout the region is completely different than that of their white counterparts," said Jennifer Ring, executive director of the ACLU of the Dakotas. "These experiences demonstrate the reasons why Native American children so often fail to reach graduation - hostility of peers, discrimination of school officials and knee-jerk police involvement."

ACLU national staff attorney Catherine Kim said the problems in Winner are part of a nationwide trend of "get tough" policies on school misconduct, which lead to increases in suspensions for trivial conduct and the use of law enforcement to handle minor school discipline. According to Kim, research consistently shows that students of color are far more likely than Caucasian students to feel the brunt of this trend, which advocates refer to as the "school-to-prison pipeline."

"Winner is a prime example of the national school-to-prison trend," Kim said. "Minority students are being pushed out of the classroom and into jail cells at alarming rates and for very minor wrongdoings." Native American students in Winner are three times more likely than their Caucasian counterparts to be suspended, and ten times

$30 million meant for Pine Ridge roads

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - On Monday, the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council debated both the boundaries of the Wounded Knee and the route for a rebuilt BIA Highway 27 through Wounded Knee. The construction project that currently has $10 million committed to it is a portion of an overall $30 million in construction projects scheduled for the next several years for the Pine Ridge Reservation.

The council was concerned about the impact of the National Park Service having influence over the boundaries of Wounded Knee in relation to a National Historic Landmark Designation and that impact on future decisions about Wounded Knee. It decided by a vote of 16-0 to reject all boundaries established or influenced by the NPS on the Pine Ridge reservation.

The council heard comments from visiting council representatives from Cheyenne River, Steve Moran, Pete Condon and Terrance Veo as well as Birgil Noble, Jay Vogt, State Historical Preservation Officer, tribal representatives and community members including Jeff Whalen, head of the OST Transportation Program. Gary Rowland, representing the Fire Lightening tiospaye and his attorney, Russell Means were also present.

Paul Hoffman, BIA, spoke about working on streamlining the Environmental Impact Statement, something that has to be completed before any construction work is initiated. If everything goes smoothly, the EIS could be completed by the end of December.

Nations gather to defend Bear Butte

A rally to oppose Jay Allan liquor license

STURGIS - An alliance of organizations are gearing up for a rally to oppose the issuance of a liquor license to Jay Allen by the Meade County Commissioners on April 4. The Intertribal Coalition to Defend Bear Butte, Owe Aku, the Bear Butte International Alliance, Mennonite Central Committee and the Lakota Action Network are informing the public of their opposition and will be present when the hearing occurs. The theme for their latest effort is, "Resist the Desecration of Places Sacred to Many Nations: Lakota, Cheyenne, and Arapahoe." The schedule as provided by the alliance is as follows: 10:00 a.m. - Gathering at Bear Butte for prayer. Noon - Meal at the community center in Sturgis. 1 p.m. - Rally at the Meade County Courthouse. 3:30 p.m. - Meade County commissioners hearing on Jay Allen's application.

The inherent and sacred relationship of Lakota people to Bear Butte is an integral part of Lakota existence in the He Sapa. Lakota people have gone to pray at Mato Paha for time immemorial and its location has always been within the boundaries of treaties entered into with the federal government. As such, despite tension over continual encroachment upon He Sapa many indigenous nations, as well as Lakota people have continued to journey to Bear Butte today is also a state park that enjoys certain protections as well as serving as a destination location for thousands of visitors each year. Nearby, Bear Butte Lake is a wildlife refuge and a growing concern is that any development will infringe upon the habitat and ecosystem that is the domain of wild life and migrant birds.

New motel open for business

BY AMANDA TAKES WAR BONNETT

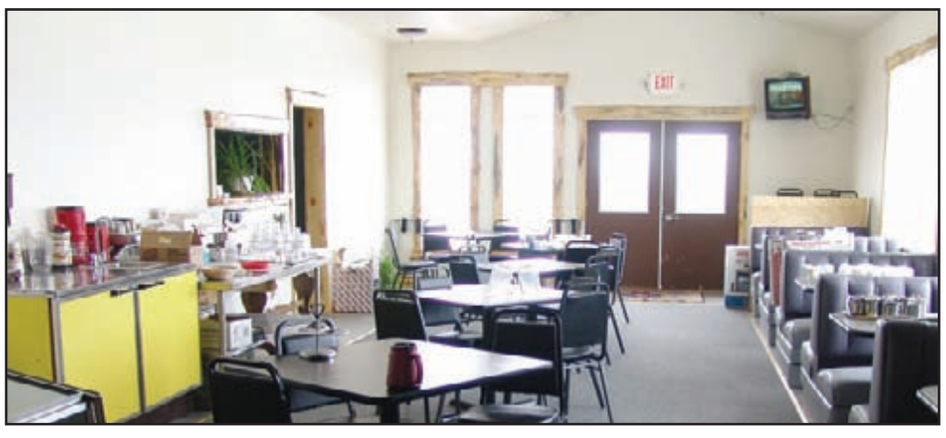
KYLE - The Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort is open for business and a grand opening is planned very soon to showcase the newest business in town.



The motel and restaurant is located in a small valley across from Oglala Lakota College's main campus Piya Wiconi on BIA Road Two. The highway has been estimated to have 1,400 travelers on busy days. It is likely that the strategic location will allow local people and travelers, alike, to take advantage of much needed lodging.

The motel was originally the Stables Motel from Rapid City. Rusty Puckett and Kathy Stover bought the motel last year and moved it to the Kyle area and have remodeled the majority of it into a beautiful, rustic wood style motel, with restaurant and a meeting room. The need for an additional eating establishment in the area is more likely to be referred to law enforcement.

At the heart of the class-action complaint filed today is the issue of coerced confessions at the Winner Middle and High Schools in Tripp County. The ACLU said the principals of the schools have been singling out Native American students for perceived violations of school rules, and then forcing them to write a "confession," which is in fact a legal document. The principal, having acted in a law enforcement capacity, then calls the police, who come to the school and take the child into custody often without notifying parents, and forwards the "confessions" to the Tripp County State's Attorneys. These prosecutors, both of whom serve as legal counsel for the Winner School District, use the confession to secure a conviction against the child in juvenile court.

Dana Hanna, the Attorney General of the Rosebud Sioux Tribe and an ACLU cooperating attorney in today's lawsuit, noted that while the school district is the second largest employer in the county, only two employees out of more than 100 are Native American. That disparity is reflected in the treatment of Native American students, he said.

Out of Winner Elementary School's 340 students, 30 percent are Native American, while only 14 percent of the 320 Winner High School students are Native American. Between two and four Native American students have graduated from Winner High School in recent years.

Last June, acting on behalf of 14 Native American families, the ACLU filed a complaint with the U.S. Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights, documenting the racial harassment and discriminatory discipline in Winner schools. But the Office of Civil Rights did not respond until March 2006, nine months later, and by then, most of the complainants had left the district - either transferring to other districts, dropping out of school, or becoming incarcerated.

Today's federal class action lawsuit seeks to challenge not only the discrimination, but also the unlawful policy of coercing confessions from Native American students.

always welcome as it allows people an option when seeking a place to meet that might be combined with a catered meal. Many entities, tribal and otherwise, often require additional capacity for meetings and the Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort will look to supply that need.

The 19 unit motel has six kitchenettes, one suite and single and doubles rooms. Stover said they offer their guest wireless Internet and satellite television. The motel is lined with a wrap around front deck, where guests may enjoy the scenery and still have protection from the weather.

Inside the resort is the Iron Road Gallery and Trading Post, which boasts a rustic hewn log look and offering guests and visitors a variety of Lakota arts and crafts from jewelry to native clothing and music.

The gallery previously was located in the Lakota Fund building and is known to carry some rather fine Lakota crafts that the public will surely appreciate as the prices competitive for the area.

The restaurant which will be open to the public after the grand opening can sit 60 people and will have a full menu. On the east door of the restaurant is a door that leads to a wood deck for outside eating. As many travelers know outside seating can be an enjoyable dining experience and this feature is often a draw for many of the finer restaurants.

Another service that is open to the public is a large meeting room that is set off to the west of the check in area. The meeting room can accommodate 30 people and Stover said catering services are available for meetings or workshops.

Stover said eventually a RV park will be available for campers. And trail rides will be offered when horse stables are built.

The motel is now open for overnight guests with some menu items available from the restaurant; the gallery is open as well as the meeting room.

The owners will soon announce a grand opening in the near future. The Lakota Prairie Ranch Resort is 455-2555.

a half million bikers and countless visitors. There is much activity that causes people to converge around Sturgis and Bear Butte and without zoning laws, liquor can be sold almost anywhere in the county.

Jay Allen, is the latest entrepreneur who is determined to build a biker bar in close proximity to Bear Butte in time for the annual "Sturgis Bike Rally" in August. The fact that he has already began to build his concert venue is seen as putting pressure on the commissioners who may feel that his application for a liquor license is a done deal.

The gathering on April 4 in Sturgis is intended to address this concern as well as to make known the nature of the opposition to the issuance of a liquor license in a location that is already fully inundated with alcohol sales.

Deb White Plume of the Intertribal Coalition to Defend Bear Butte explained the rationale for the days activities and related schedule. She said, "On April 4 we will have our gathering at Bear Butte at 10:00 a.m. We will caravan into Sturgis and at the first junction begin our march. We will march through Sturgis, then meet at the community center for lunch and then go over information for the meeting. Then, we will walk to the Meade County courthouse. We will hold a rally and have speakers. We hope to have Chief Oliver Red Cloud speak along with Arvol Looking Horse, Alex White Plume and the Northern Cheyennes."

White Plume also explained that the criteria contained in an application for a liquor license involves a couple of major criteria and that is what her alliance will address. She said, "There will also be an open mike for the young people to talk. We would like to have a really big march and let them know our opposition to development around Bear Butte. There are two ways that the commissioners look the application and those are character and location. We are asking people to talk of the inappropriate location. There are also many local people, farmers and ranchers, who are opposed to development."

Finally, White Plume explained that the opposition to the liquor license will require more time during the allotted time slot. She said, "We are talking to the Meade County Commissioners. Now, whoever has the floor will be only given 30 minutes to talk in opposition and 30 minutes for those in favor. We hope they will extend the time to at least an hour. There are 50 establishments that sell liquor in Meade County. How many more do they need?"

years, we have held field hearings in Wounded Knee and in Manderson and we need to move ahead. We had money appropriated before that ended up going to other projects because we couldn't make a decision on the route." Several council representatives did not want to delay the project but wondered if there was any way to move the route further to the south to put more distance between the road and the massacre site. Their thoughts were echoed by Leola One Feather, vice chair of the Wounded Knee community, who presented an alternate route that would close the #3 presented by Paul Hoffman. Rowland also expressed an interest in routing the road farther south and covering up the current highway in the massacre site.

Even though the council was leaning towards the number 3 route that moves the road to the south, the council voted 12-2 to take the issue back to the community for one or two listening sessions and bring it back to the council floor in 30 days.

The rebuilding of BIA 27 is the last stretch of road between Highway 18 and Scenic to be rebuilt with a modern approach, better sight lines, shoulders, fewer curves and less hills; the project has $10 million appropriated for the completion and if everything goes right it would start in the summer of 2007 and be completed in late fall of 2008.

Other road construction projects on Pine Ridge include the completion of the highway from north of Loneman at the White River bridge to south of the Buffalo gap junction, a project that has been upgraded from a base and blotter project to asphalt at a cost of $5 million.

Currently, the state has contracted with Heavy Constructors to do curbs and gutters in Pine Ridge and replace the old bridge below the old hospital with a boxed culvert, a project slated to be completed in early summer at a cost of $3.32 million. The state also is redoing Highway 18 from down town Pine Ridge to Oglala and includes a bike and pedestrian pathway from Oglala to Loneman with a completion date in 2010 at a cost of $12 million.

Arab nations.

Bird flu is one form of avian influenza identified by scientists as avian influenza A (H5N1.) There are a number of websites, which are offering an excellent overview of just what the bird flu is. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention website, the bird flu has caused birds in Asia and Europe to be infected. Also in Asia humans are known to be infected and those occurrences are being studied to understand how that is possible. A cross species infection from birds to humans is apparently rare. The hope among scientists is that it will not be resistant to drug therapy.

Facts about pandemic flu heard at South Dakota Summit

A couple weeks ago, a pandemic flu summit was held in Sioux Falls and U.S. secretary of health and human services, Michael Leavitt, was on the agenda, along with Governor Mike Rounds and South Dakotan Julie Gerberding, who is the director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

Leavitt said the government would provide funds for the state to begin preparations for an epidemic and more funds would be available on July 1. He cautioned the audience of some 450 people that South Dakota has 5,000 communities and they should not depend on the federal government.

Rural people on the northern plains are used to making preparations for blizzards and other hazardous weather and they are being asked to use this as a model for taking care of their families. It is notable that some estimate that thirty percent of the state's population could be sickened if there is an outbreak of some form of the flu that is resistant to treatment.

That concern brings up another issues that hospital must face. The sickest patients will have to be attended to and that will require emergency rooms to make hard choices. The elderly, those with chronic health conditions and the very young will be most at risk.

Gerberding noted that if there were such an emergency that it would necessitate being isolated from others, staying home from church and avoid face-to-face contact as much as possible. The Sioux Falls Argus-Leader quoted her when she said, "It's going to be very easy to become complacent. We need to channel our fear into long lasting commitment that outlasts the news."

Tim Jacobs, safety officer at Pine Ridge Indian Health Service, said they are in the planning stages of doing some drills and developing an awareness plan and working with the tribe's emergency preparedness program. They have been involved in working with the state.

Information being disseminated by the Rosebud Hospital

The Rosebud I.H.S. hospital has been rather conscientious in meeting its public health responsibilities to the Sicangu Lakota people and disseminating information on a possible bird flu epidemic is within their scope of authority.

Charles Mack of the environmental health department of the Rosebud service unit sent out a packet of information dated March 16 to area schools, municipalities, and area officials. He notes, "This is basic information on preparation for the community and should not be perceived as a cause for panic. Personal planning is paramount in the threat of this possible bird flu pandemic."

The packet notes that many businesses, schools and communications networks would be closed and this would leave the responsibility to family units to make preparations for a 6-8 week time period to withstand the onslaught if it occurred.

One recommendation of interest to families and which can easily be carried out is the first item, which asks families to assemble a disaster supply kit. The kit should contain water and food supplies and can also be used during other emergencies. It also recommends a 30-day supply of prescription medication as well as other over the counter medicines and sports drinks.

An excellent list of non-perishable supplies are recommended since many of these items may not be available during an emergency such as a pandemic.

The Rosebud Hospital and other organizational entities, including the state will most likely continue to inform the public about this potential threat to the public health by other media campaigns. It will require repeated attempts to inform the public of its responsibility to be prepared in any emergency.

Team South Dakota prepares for 2006 North American Indigenous games

MISSION - Four years ago, Team South Dakota sent eight teams with 128 athletes to compete in five different sports at the 2002 North American Indigenous Games in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada; this year preparations are coming together to send 19 teams representing Team South Dakota with at least 276 participants in nine different sports to the 2006 North American Indigenous Games in July in Denver, CO.

"It was such a great experience for all of our athletes four years ago," said Denise One Star, chef de mission(team leader), "during the competition in Canada, we earned five gold, three silver and seven bronze medals and had a chance to compete with teams from Canada and the U.S. in an international setting."

Team South Dakota has been holding tryouts and coordinating a variety of activities to come up with teams to compete in basketball, volleyball, wrestling, athletics (track and field and cross country), baseball, golf, archery, taekwando and boxing. Basketball has the largest participation with girls and boys teams in the 13/14, 15/16 and 17-19 age groups and an adult women's team.

The Midget boys (15/16 defeated British Columbia, New York and Nova Scotia and lost to Washington in the semis to earn a bronze. The juvenile girls downed New York and Manitoba and lost to Wisconsin in the semis for the bronze. The Midget girls beat Manitoba, Wisconsin and New York and lost to North Dakota in the championship for the silver.

OST president Fire Thunder considers donating individual land for abortion clinic

Opposes recent criminalization of abortion in South Dakota

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

PINE RIDGE - The eyes of the nation were on the legislative actions of South Dakota and the Governor as the historical signing of HB 1215 made abortions illegal in the state. It created a controversy that caused Oglala Sioux tribal president, Cecilia Fire Thunder, to sit up and take notice also.

Fire Thunder was recently interviewed by syndicated columnist Tim Giago in reference to the state's abortion ban and she expressed her willingness to assist women. She also expressed her concern about continuing violence against Native women. Following the interview with Giago her office was flooded with inquiries from press about her position relative to the ban and what might be done in reality to assist women.

In a press release issued on March 24, Fire Thunder reiterated her stance on the issue and offered to assist women in exercising their own health decisions, which had been recently deemed illegal by the signing of HB 1215. The possibility of donating individual land was mentioned as a way to provide an option to women regarding their own health decisions. It would curtail the necessity of having to drive to other states in order to exercise those choices. "We want to have a viable option closer to home. Of course in our culture children are sacred, but women are sacred too and somebody who has been victimized by rape or incest should have options," Fire Thunder said.

The abortion ban is an issue that will continue to pit both sides against each other, as members of Planned Parenthood and other groups have recently demonstrated against the legislation. At present, the ban is not in place and it will most likely be challenged in the courts as being unconstitutional.

In the press release Fire Thunder wrote, "Establishing a clinic on the reservation is part of bringing a sense of dignity back to the victims from whom it was viciously stripped away."

Fire Thunder said that standing firm against the ban was not a matter of asserting tribal jurisdiction, but rather upholding federal law as it now exists. She wrote, "We are making it clear that we support the constitutional right of women all over this country, and particular here in South Dakota to make their own decisions and their own choices regarding their health… We intend to take the lead to make sure that we live up to our constitution and our own ideals and respect our female citizens."

The right to exercise such personal choices when it comes to rape or incest will need to be reconciled and interfaced with the Lakota notion of wakanyeja in which all children are considered sacred.

Dorothy Marshall, the Co-Chair of the Lakota Women for Change on the Rosebud shared a similar viewpoint with Fire Thunder as she noted, "The only one who can judge us is God. I believe in freedom of choice. The government can't tell us how to live our lives. There is so much hypocrisy in religion. I think it is her decision and her choice offering it to women to make that choice. We have that right. South Dakota feels that they can make that decision."

Marshall continued, "If you are versed in Lakota history, our people practiced birth control. They didn't have a whole of children. We were nomadic and couldn't be dragging a lot of kids around."

On the other side of the issue is certainly the traditional Lakota viewpoint which does not tamper with the sanctity of human life. It is an issue that, again, will likely lead to further discussion and debate around other Tiospaye in Lakota country.

Philomene Lakota, an Oglala, was asked about the term 'abortion' and she said, "Lakota wicoiye wanice, my research tells me" meaning that traditionally there was no such word to describe such an event. She did note that there is a term that was used to describe a miscarriage or a premature birth and it was, "hoksi hiyuye."

Furthermore, Lakota said, "It is a matter for all the people. If that is going to happen, it doesn't need to happen here." In the Lakota language, she noted her disdain for the way things are now days and that there was no such thing as abortion. "He wicohan ki unhapsni eyas lehan ebah waicunpi." She also said that the people have not been consulted about this issue when she said, "Tohante oyate inagna waiyungesp sni."

Dakota Sioux language saved by scrabble

HANKINSON, N.D. - Those who hope they can stop the Dakota Sioux language from dying have hit on the perfect word: Scrabble.

A special Scrabble tournament in the language made its debut last Friday, pitting teams from reservation schools in North Dakota, South Dakota and Manitoba.

The game is part of the tribe's campaign to revitalize the Dakota language, now spoken fluently by a dwindling number of elders. One survey predicted the last fluent Sisseton-Wahpeton Dakota speaker would die in 2025.

"With these efforts, we'll try to prolong that," Darell DeCoteau said as he gestured to a nearby Scrabble board. "This will probably push that back a little bit."

"Start in the middle," David Seaboy told a group of middle-school students from the Enemy Swim Day School at Waubay, S.D. "Everybody help somebody make a word."

The first word to take shape was sa, pronounced "shah" - the color red.

After a few minutes of frantic consultation with the official Dakota Sioux Scrabble dictionary, a team built on the base to form the word sapa, pronounced "shah-pa," or dirty, a word worth seven points.

"This is a good stimulant for the mind," said Seaboy, 63, one of a group of Sisseton-Wahpeton elders, all fluent in the language, who wrote the 207-page Dakota dictionary.

Biker bars, hot hot women & spring cleaning, what a combo

It's spring and we should celebrate! The big snow we were hoping for arrived and nourished Mother Earth. Now it's time to celebrate the green that's fast approaching and to celebrate life. On Saturday, people celebrated "wakinya agli" welcoming back the thunders on Harney Peak (Hinhan Kaga Paha) which is the beginning of spring and welcoming back the rains. It is a traditional event that Lakota people do that is in association with the constellation time and the spring solstice. There are five journeys made every year on behalf of the children and the families. There are five sites in the Black Hills that are considered sacred homelands to the Lakota people. Each one has a spiritual connection and meaning to the Lakota people.

The month of April is Oglala Sioux Tribe's Mni gluonihanpi na Unci maka ta anpetu, Respect Mother Earth, and reservation wide clean-up days are scheduled throughout the month.

The dates have been rescheduled from last month due to the spring storm. Each of the nine districts, the OST Environmental Protection Program, and the Natural/Water Resources are coordinating efforts to do clean ups in the districts. For the week of April 3 to 7, Wounded Knee, Porcupine and White Clay districts; for the week of April 10 to 14 for Medicine Root, Wanblee and Pine Ridge and for the week of April 17 to 21, the districts of LaCreek, Wakpamni and Pass Creek.

We shouldn't think of this as a once a year chore, but make it a daily/weekly habit to keep our homes and communities clean.

The fate of Bear Butte

On Monday several grass roots, as well as International organizations will gather at 10:00 a.m. at sacred Bear Butte, East of Sturgis, South Dakota in Meade County for a small ceremony and will proceed into Sturgis for the County commissioners meeting.

As we showed you a few weeks ago on our front page, construction has already begun on the proposed site and it has us wondering if the County commissioners haven't already unofficially given the green light on the project.

Deb White Plume, Oglala Lakota tribal member and coordinator of International Coalition to Defend Bear Butte strongly put it this way, "I think there's something really wrong with Meade County because they would rather have drunken behavior, drugging, violence, abuse, other criminal behavior and people peeing in the ditches, but they don't want Indians praying at Bear Butte."

"Other cities and counties around the country have laws to protect the integrity of schools, hospitals and churches. Bear Butte is where we pray, teach our way of life and it's where we receive healing. We want the same respect given to Bear Butte that they give to schools, hospitals and churches in the United States, that's all we are asking for. This is a 'Call to Action' for all allies to come out and support us."

Tuesday, April 4, at 3:30 p.m. the Meade County Commissioners will hold a public hearing to discuss whether they should give Jay Allen a malt beverage license. Allen is planning a huge "World Biggest Biker Bar" at the bottom of Bear Butte, which will include a big amphitheatre with the butte as the background, a bar and lots and lots of asphalt where truckers can park to enjoy what Allen's Sturgis County Line Biker Bar has to offer.

We urge people who are concerned to get involved in preventing this from happening. In reality, this license means a lot of money to the county in terms of the sales tax they get from alcohol sales.

Jay Allen has been promoting his Sturgis County Line biker bar as hundreds of acres to party, lots of parking space for bikers and plenty of ice cold beer and "oh yea, hot, hot women."

Things to empower yourself

What is liberated?

By Patty Pourier

Liberated? What is liberated? To women today living in rural America- this is liberated:

*Rising before dawn to throw a load of laundry in the dryer before going off to exercise- keeping the muscle tone up and the cholesterol down.

* is getting harder every year…. I want to be healthy and have enough vanity to want to look as good as possible as everything on my body seems to be going south.

*making coffee and breakfast early enough to have a few minutes with my husband to read an inspirational affirmation for the day and doing a prayer to hopefully let God know I am still here-and to reassure myself He is still there.

* is making sure I keep a sense of humor and be treated like a man with ovaries.

* is sitting in a meeting and hearing the CEO of a large oil company make power point jokes about a "husband store that proves you cannot make women happy", when over 80 percent of the people clerking, scrubbing toilets and receiving minimum wage at the local oil company branded store are women. Liberated is wanting to stand up and leave the room when these comments are made and being too afraid to because of retribution.

*is hearing white middle class men, making a decision of forcing a 15 year old girl who is pregnant because of rape to have to go through the pregnancy because politics has infringed on a woman's body.

* is still making sure you cook a homemade something to take to church for the Sunday pot luck.

* is going back to work too soon after having a baby, with the expectation that you should have no feelings different than any other person in your office.

* is being treated like one of the guys, but having none of the guy pay, none of the guy's respect, and no entrance to the "good old boys club".

* is not what we thought it was going to be in the 1970's, but know that what we did in the 70s was the only thing that could help to balance the scale?

* is knowing that the television networks rarely show (on a regular basis) a series where a capable woman is President of the United States.

* is having the first female Tribal President and having the fact she is female be a topic of discussion.

* is having one of the few husbands that see the things are not equal and that women in America are less repressed than any other women in the world.

* is still believing that my granddaughter can be anything she wants to be-telling her so- and knowing in my heart a lot has to change before this is true.

* is doing all of this and still feeling less than.

* is having a fellow Christian woman tell you that after you are SUPERWOMAN at work and at home that you should be subservient to your husband, while all the time you know she is being physically, emotionally and mentally abused by her husband.

* is sitting in a board room with owners of the company telling you are one of them-just not on paper.

* is knowing you can and will do more, better and faster than some others and not be rewarded or even recognized because you have something different under your slacks than the men does under his!

We are asking respect for our 'sacred mountain'

My name is Carter Camp, I'm a Ponca Indian and I have been chosen to be the "Eyapaha" or "Traditional Speaker" for the Inter-Tribal Coalition to Defend Bear Butte. (www.defendbearbutte.org).

As such, I would like to announce a major effort by more than 30 Sovereign Indian Nations in America to stop the obscene developments which are being built all around the Mountain each of our Nations hold sacred and inviolable. For over a century our Nations have attempted to explain to the encroaching Americans that this Sacred Mountain is a place where we come to pray and it holds an exquisitely important place in the ancient religious ways of each of our Nations. For example, during each of America's World Wars, plus Korea and Viet Nam, our Nations and our Veterans pilgrimage to Bear Butte to pray for the victories of American Armed Forces and the safe return of our tribal warriors who fought in those wars in such great numbers. In fact all year around hundreds of Indian people make their pilgrimage to Bear Butte to pray, fast, and hold religious ceremonies. The Mountain holds such tremendous meaning to our people that many of us believe our entire way of life will be destroyed if the continued exploitation of the land around Bear Butte is allowed to continue by local and State governments.

Now because those same local and state governments refuse to hear our pleas to mitigate the developments or in any way cooperate with our requests for a five-mile buffer zone around her base, we must attempt to convince them in a more direct way. Therefore we have decided to hold another "Great Gathering of the Nations" such as the one Hunkpapa Chief Sitting Bull held in the mid 1800's for the same reason… to protect our sacred grounds. Chief Sitting Bull gathered 6,000 of his people; we plan on gathering over 10,000 native people on Bear Butte during this year's "Sturgis Bike Rally" to stand and march in witness and protest to the destruction of our most holy site. Each day of the "Rally" we plan on exercising our Constitutional right to assemble on Bear Butte and march to the Sturgis City Hall and/or the various scenes of noisy, drunken debauchery taking place around the slopes of our sacred mountain.

Our people will begin gathering to hold ceremonies on the Fourth of July and we will continue to gather our people until August when a "Grand Council of the Tribes" will be held to determine our future course of actions. All Traditional Societies will take their place in the grand circle; Traditional Chiefs will lead societies of Kit Fox, Dog Soldiers, Ponca He'Thuska, and other Lakota Tokala and Akicita to take their places at the front of the people. Our effort will be led principally by American Indian Veterans who have fought for America in all of her wars.

The second effort will be an International boycott of the Broken Spoke Saloon and all booze serving campgrounds within the five-mile buffer zone. This effort will be spearheaded by the newly formed biker group "BIKERS FOR BEAR BUTTE" who will take it upon themselves to inform the biker nation that Meade County and South Dakota are turning a deaf and racist ear to Indian people and only the bikers themselves can take the proper steps to enforce the buffer zone by asking all bikers not to patronize any campground, booze party, or concert venue within the buffer zone. They will "request" in the strongest terms that their fellow bikers stay off Highway 34 and 79 within five miles of Bear Butte. This effort has already begun and will grow much stronger before the "Rally".

In closing I would like to assure the people of South Dakota that our gathering and marches will be peaceful and within Constitutional bounds. We will seek permits for our marches and gathering places and we intend to comply with existing laws. But in the end, we fully intend to protect the sanctity of our sacred mountain no matter how long it takes; we have done so for hundreds of years and we intend to continue as long as she is being shown disrespect and remains under attack.

We further ask the people of South Dakota to help us by writing or calling their legislators and asking them to enact the five-mile buffer zone as law.

In 2001 the World Trade Center ruins became "Sacred Ground" to all Americans so it seems America can understand the concept with which our people have regarded Bear Butte from time immemorial.

All we're asking is that South Dakotans give our sacred mountain the same respect given to New York's sacred site.

Emergency preparedness on the 'rez'

Dr. Archie Beauvais (nagik sapa) Sicangu Lakota, is a decorated Vietnam Veteran with a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and resides on the Rosebud.

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

The prospect of a major catastrophe on any tribal lands in the nation is something we probably do not give much thought to as average citizens. On the Rosebud, we have a volunteer emergency preparedness program that is headed up by the very energetic and capable Brian Herman. I had the honor of interviewing him several months ago and was able to get a sense of his responsibility and commitment.

I didn't think to inquire of him the strategies he might employ when facing such things as an oil tanker spill, chemical spill or a major roadway accident involving multiple injuries and trauma. I suppose there are many other scenarios, which we might think of and the same probably applies to the emergency preparedness folks as they must sit around and ponder the same kind of questions.

When I was in college, I can remember taking a graduate statistics class where one was asked to calculate the risk of a chemical spill occurring in a fictional town by one of the many tractor-trailers hauling their load. It was a fun exercise and exactly the kind of thing that emergency personnel probably concern themselves with if time permits.

It makes one wonder what kinds of public health concerns Lakota people had centuries ago when we experienced the encroachment and pressures of westward expansion by the masses. Such catastrophic events as the slaughter of buffalo and the mining all of our gold at a stir crazy pace must have represented such a public health concern.

It occurs to me that defining a public health threat and a related catastrophe depends on which population you happen to be from throughout the ages. Lakota people were alarmed at the incursion of white people onto our dwindling land base and equated the killing of the buffalo as a tragic event. The frontiersmen who were bent on making a buck or two, most likely saw it as commerce rather than a scourge upon a way of life for a proud people who only wanted to be left alone.

Lakota people most likely saw the excavation and extraction gold from our sacred He Sapa as an affront to 'Unci Maka' as well as to Lakota people who occupied the area from time immemorial and wished to have their property rights respected.

In this day and age, we know now that the possession of a land base is based upon historical treaties, which are to be held in perpetuity, or based upon power. Power is the issue worldwide which dictates why some nations can have weapons of mass destruction and some cannot, while others will not allow a proper accounting.

Now, we find ourselves having to prepare for a possible worldwide epidemic called the bird flu. When it is expected to mutate into something difficult to treat with medicine and kill many by spreading from nation to nation, it is called a pandemic. God forbid if it should visit the Lakota people, as enough invading forces, which took everything from our dignity to our childhoods, have assaulted us.

My sincere hope is that we will all prepare ourselves with enough supplies to last a couple of months and observe common sense things like washing our hands and staying home when we are sick. I think the Lakota people who live far off the highway and in places where their 'tiospayes' were traditionally located will be the better off, as they will avoid contact from the rest of the community. They will enjoy a certain isolation from those who may get sick as they wait for things to get better.

The bird flu represents yet another public health concern that many local health professionals will be looking at very seriously in the coming months. We will ask 'tunkasila' to be with us as we ponder what kind of strategies to employ as we work to protect our families and ourselves.

Driving the snakes out of South Dakota

Ah, St. Patrick's Day has passed us by, but in the wee city of Rapid City an untimely blizzard the day after caused the annual parade to be postponed until the following Saturday.

I remember that as a student at Holy Rosary Indian Mission boarding school on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation in South Dakota, the nun who was our teacher, would give all of the students a green strip of paper to clip to their bibbed overalls so that we wouldn't get pinched for not wearing the green. Her name was Sister Patricia and I think this is a play on the name Patrick.

In our Catechism class we were told that St. Patrick lived in the Emerald Isles and was famous for driving all of the snakes from the land. Chief Day Boy, a fellow student at HRM, wished that the good Saint had come to the Pine Ridge Reservation one spring day.

His name was actually Aloysius Day Boy but we called him "Chief" for some strange reason. We were playing softball in front of Red Cloud Hall when Chief Day Boy spotted a huge snake. After close observation he determined that it was a bull snake that closely resembles a rattlesnake. He made a grab for it and missed and found out soon enough that even a bull snake can bite. It chomped down on the fleshy part of his right hand and sent him screaming to the infirmary. Where was St. Patrick when you needed him?

As I said, the St. Patrick's Day Parade will go on this coming Saturday because it is a tradition late or not. But you see St. Pat's Day isn't even a legal holiday. People still go to work and the schools are still open. The post office and the banks keep operating. And yet, all around the town one sees shamrocks and everybody wears something green. It's a nice day to have and some of the guys drinking green beer in the local pub seem to enjoy it immensely.

But there is a legal holiday in South Dakota that gets little attention from the general population. The day became a holiday in 1990, sixteen years ago. It is called Native American Day, and it was recognized by the state legislators and the governor as a legal holiday.

Perhaps because I had something to do with it, the local media hardly mentions it. You see, I have been critical of the South Dakota press and electronics media for more than 30 years. It appears the media moguls in this state have very thin skins. They can dish it out and ruin a lot of lives in the process, but don't you dare ever criticize them. You will be forever censored if you do.

Indian activists called the State of South Dakota the Mississippi of the North in the 1970s. And yet, 20 years later it became the only state out of 50 to set aside a special day to honor the Native Americans.

Native American Day replaced Columbus Day 16 years ago, and yet many of the department store chains located in this fair city still advertise Columbus Day instead of the day that replaced it. Some of the local banks now put up signs at their drive up windows proclaiming that they will be closed on Oct. 12 to celebrate Native American Day.

After all of these years it seems that Native Americans are the invisible people although in Western South Dakota we make up nearly 25 percent of the total population. After observing the television advertising by Golden West Telecommunications Co., and determining that all of the participants were non-Indians, I called the director of the company, Dwight Flatt, and mentioned this to him. He immediately called in his advertising agency and set about to include Native Americans in his company's commercials. As a matter of fact, Golden West also gives their employees a holiday on Native American Day.

An Indian friend of mine from another state was visiting me one day when a commercial for South Dakota State University aired. The ad showed various people in various jobs and asked the rhetorical question, "What do all of these people have in common." My guest said, "They're all white?" It is a shame because SDSU has had several very influential American Indians graduate from that fine institution. And at a time when the Indian children of this state badly need role models, where are the ads lauding these Indian graduates? Roe v. Wade is not the problem in South Dakota; the problem is white v. Indians.

Like most of the Lakota people in this state, I try to wear something green on St. Patrick's Day, but I also try to attend the wonderful Black Hills Pow Wow that is celebrated on Native American Day each year in Rapid City.

When the advertising agencies of America, especially in states with large Indian populations, understand that not all of its citizens are black or white, perhaps they will then color us (Indians) into their advertising so that we will no longer be the invisible people.

In the meantime, I intend to enjoy the annual St. Patrick's Day parade on Saturday.

Fire Thunder should run for Governor

Dear Editor:

I read Tim Giago's column last week about Cecilia Fire Thunder's pledge to build an abortion clinic on her land to serve the women of South Dakota. This reminds me of the fairly recent event here in Wisconsin where several regional tribes pooled their resources to buy land that had for many years been owned by mining companies determined to start up a copper mine near the headwaters of the Wolf River. Citizens from around the state stymied this project again and again by working the system. But it was like a bad smell that just kept coming back. After the last legislative/administrative defeat, several tribes made the owners an offer they couldn't refuse and purchased the land. Some of the tribes are wealthy due to casino operations, but at least one had to borrow their share of the money.

As a grandaughter of Scandinavian immigrants, I can't tell you how grateful I am to the first Americans for taking these steps in defense of the earth as well as, now, in defense of basic liberty. Many years ago when I was a senior in high school, I had the great good fortune to be befriended by a fellow student. This was a big deal in a small Northern Wisconsin school for a girl relocated from Chicago. My friend and her family were Chippewas. Her father was a teacher at the nearby Job Corps facility, but their family home was on the reservation at Rice Lake. I spent many weekends with them, traveling to their home as well as the homes of family members living at Lac du Flambeau. She and I were both rejects, but our friendship was about more than that. Sadly, we parted ways when we went off to different colleges and lost track of one another.

Now I live in the part of Wisconsin where the Oneida tribe dwells. They have done well financially in this area, thanks to the casino near Green Bay. Whites have for the most part changed their attitudes and the racism that was so blatant 35 years ago has subsided somewhat. But it emerges every year when the sturgeon run and the white men get together to complain about the 'discrimination' they experience in this context. It's really obnoxious, though this is also subsiding somewhat as time passes.

Anyway, if you want to pass this on to Ms. Fire Thunder, please let her know I think she's a hero and the women of South Dakota are fortunate to have her. Perhaps she should run for governor of South Dakota. She'd probably have a great chance of winning.

Best Regards,
Joanne Roush

Pine Ridge students earn honors at AISES

BY MISTY MOUSSEAU
Special to the Times

PINE RIDGE - Last week a late spring snow storm had cancelled a trip for a group of Pine Ridge High School students who were traveling to Albuquerque, N.M. to attend the 19th Annual National American Indian Science & Engineering Society. By Tuesday afternoon the trip had been reorganized and the students departed Wednesday on a very interesting trip.

The annual science fair event is sponsored by the American Indian Science & Engineering Society. This event serves as a qualification to the International Science Fair held each year as well as awards, cash prizes, scholarship, and awards for additional categories. This undertaking is an educational activity that allows students to teach themselves, to take from the established information what they need to discover something new, and to identify and choose the tools they need to conduct and conclude their projects. When a student completes a science fair project year after year, through junior and senior high school, the science project produces mature, self-confident, skilled and competitive young leaders who have career goals and the preparation to attain them.

AISES is a private, non-profit organization that nurtures building of community by bridging science and technology with traditional native values. The fair is one of AISES' K-12 educational initiatives that supports the advancement of American Indian students in mathematics, science, and engineering. The fair provides a learning experience that promotes academic and cultural enrichment for students.

that had sent and gained awards at this event but had never had the opportunity arise until this year to work with Pine Ridge High School students. As a graduate of PRHS and trip manager for AISES-NAISEF it is definitely a sense of true accomplishment to return to my old high school to work with new students who are preparing to enter their college endeavors.

I have many great things to speak of these students as I recall being in there exact shoes over almost 10 years ago. AISES has been my extended family since my days at PRHS and I am proud to have had the chance to be represented by so many great students and projects at this years NAISEF event. The students' eyes were so big and their smiles and words spoke very highly of their appreciation for participation in this event.

This years NAISEF had reached its capacity for projects submitted back in early February. PRHS had entered five projects with one not attending and four representing their high school. The students had competed in several categories by grade level and among over 325 projects and 526 students from across the United States and Alaska. Students had traveled from Miami, Fla. with their parents to take part in the event. I was blessed to have a great group represent PRHS as well as local AISES chapters and sponsors from our area and region. Two of the four projects submitted had placed in there respected categories and grade levels.

A special thanks to Pine Ridge High School for there travel for the students to and from New Mexico, as well as the chaperones for this event Lynelle Long and Martin Pilcher. Also, a huge thank You! To Sylvia Pendleton for assisting the students in completion of their projects submitted. And the many thanks to anyone who contributed to assist me at AISES get these students to NM for NAISEF. I do look forward to Detroit in the fall!

If anyone has any questions or interests in future AISES events please feel free to contact me via email at mousseaux@yahoo.com or your local college chapter. This is a great opportunity for any high school students to embark on early as AISES offers paid summer internships, scholarships, travel, and leadership trainings to members in there active chapters thru college.

No one ever told Otakuye Conroy that Lakota girls aren't good at math

Lakota winyan first American Indian to earn doctorate in environmental engineering

BY MARY GARRIGAN
Rapid City Journal

Editor's noteReprinted with permission from the Rapid City Journal.

No one ever told Otakuye Conroy that Lakota girls aren't good at math.

"I never got that message," said the 29-year-old Lakota woman and math whiz from Rapid City, who may become the first Lakota - if not the first American Indian - to earn a doctorate degree in environmental engineering when she graduates from the University of Arizona on May 6.

"I was never told that girls don't do math," Conroy said of the stereotype. "In fact, most of the science and math teachers I've ever had were females."

Her own aptitude for numbers was apparent early in life.

"I was always better in math and science. It always made more sense than English or history did," she said.

Conroy (whose first name is pronounced "Oh-TOCK-oo-yay" and means Many Relatives Woman in Lakota) was born on Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. She and her family moved from Porcupine in time for her to start kindergarten in Rapid City.

What Conroy did not see in the classroom, even after 22 years of formal education, was an American Indian teacher.

"I've never had a Native American teacher - not in grade school, high school, college or graduate school," she said. "I've had Native counselors, but never a teacher."

Conroy first remembers being excited by science at Horace Mann Elementary School in Rapid City. When she progressed faster than her fifth-grade classmates, the teacher let her study independently. "Pretty soon, I was a year ahead of the rest of the class," she said.

At Rapid City Central High School, physics teacher Mark Farrand remembers Conroy as a hard-working, self-motivated student who excelled in the classroom. Farrand had lost touch with his former student after she graduated in 1994, but he was not surprised to learn of her academic accomplishments.

"What I remember was that she really didn't need a lot of special attention," Farrand said. "You can typically tell by the time they're seniors which ones are going to go on to achieve great things academically. Otak was definitely one of them."

Otakuye Conroy, a 1994 graduate of Rapid City Central High School, studied endocrine changes caused by human hormones in wastewater for her doctoral degree in environmental engineering from the University of Arizona. It was Farrand who first exposed Conroy to the American Indian Science and Engineering Society. Nationally, AISES provides opportunities for American Indian students to pursue their interests in science, technology, engineering and math, also known as the STEM disciplines.

Conroy attended an AISES convention during her junior year in high school and, for the first time, the idea of pursuing a career in science became a real possibility to the bright Lakota teen with a gift for math.

That pleases Pamala Silas, executive director of AISES, who works to open science and math fields to American Indian students.

"AISES is very pleased to hear of the success of Ms. Conroy. There are too few Native Americans that have obtained this level of achievement, and through her accomplishments, she blazes a path for others," Silas said.

Conroy earned an undergraduate degree in chemistry from the University of Notre Dame and two master's degrees in chemistry and engineering from UA.

Her parents, Vina and Arlo Conroy, will be in the audience when the oldest of their five children walks across the stage wearing a doctoral-degree hood.

"We're all going," said her mom, Vina. "Her dad, her sister and brothers, even her grandma." Her grandmother is planning a big honoring ceremony and Lakota give-away at her home in Porcupine later this summer to celebrate Otakuye's graduation.

The importance of education was a message that was sent early and often in the Conroy home.

"My mom and dad always sent the message that education was important," Otakuye said.

Both of her parents work for Indian Health Service in Rapid City and, although they have taken college courses, neither has a college degree.

They wanted more education and better job opportunities for their five children.

"We just raised all the kids that way," Vina said. "Everyday, me and my husband told the kids that good grades mattered, that college was important."

Otakuye's sister, Weewashte, 24, attends nursing school and a brother, Jesse, is planning to attend a vocational-technical school. The youngest son, 12-year-old Shota, is in middle school.

Vina Conroy said her oldest daughter has always been driven to succeed.

"She has that drive in her," she said. "She always had that drive."

And academics weren't her only interest. She was chosen as Miss Black Hills Nation at the Black Hills Powwow in the mid-1990s and she had a short-lived movie career that included a small role in "Dances with Wolves" and the role of Mary in "Miracle in the Wilderness."

Joe Hiller, Ph.D., is an assistant dean at the University of Arizona and a role model of sorts for Conroy. He is of Lakota heritage and graduated from Hot Springs High School in 1970.

"Otakuye is quite a scholar," Hiller said.

Hiller mentors Indian students such as Conroy in the Alfred P. Sloan Program, which is part of the university's strong track record of enrolling and graduating Indian students. Approximately 600 undergraduates and 200 graduate native students attend UA, and it ranks among the top five universities in conferring doctoral degrees to American Indians.

As a Sloan scholar, Conroy is unusual in that she is Lakota, but not because she is a woman.

"Most of the graduate students I know are Navajo, perhaps because the school is in Arizona," she said. Navajos are the largest U.S. Indian tribe.

And although engineering is still a male-dominated field, that may be changing in environmental engineering. "Half of my classmates are female," Conroy said, "and in my doctorate program, there are more females than men."

After four years of college and six years of graduate school, Conroy is excited to finally get to apply her academic degrees in the real world where environmental pollution and water contamination threaten the nation's water sources.

Her doctoral research measured concentrations of human hormones, chiefly estrogen, found in Arizona ground water supplies and focused on endocrine disruption caused by wastewater effluent.

"There's a water shortage here in Tucson, and the area will soon need to start using treated wastewater as a water resource," she said.

But sewage contains estrogen in amounts that can be harmful to humans. Regulating and removing estrogen from water supplies are future challenges that scientists such as Conroy will face.

It is a fascinating field of research in which she could easily spend her entire career, Conroy said. "I would like to focus on water quality monitoring in some way. That would be very exciting to be a part of," she said.

Whether that happens in an academic setting, in private industry or in tribal government, she doesn't know yet.

"I have to decide soon," she said of her job options. She's applying for faculty positions at the university level, but she also considers working for the Indian Health Service as an environmental engineer or coming back to South Dakota to work with water management and water quality issues at the tribal level.

Stacy Phelps, a science educator at Oglala Lakota College, would love to see Conroy return to Pine Ridge Reservation to work on water issues.

"We operate an EPA-certified water quality lab at OLC and are very interested in offering her a position to work with our labs and to begin working as an instructor down the road," Phelps said. "... If we can get her back, she'll be a great role model for our students."

Vina Conroy tells her daughter to follow her own heart.

"Me and her dad would both like her to do what she wants to do," Vina said. "She's worked really hard to get to this point. It's her choice. Wherever she wants to go, whatever she chooses is fine with us."

FREE Cholesterol Screening for Native Americans

The Chadron Native American Center along with Western Community Health Resources has a lot to offer Native Americans. We are promoting good health and wellness by many screenings, which can tell people if they are healthy, or not. We are offering free cholesterol screens that are very accurate and fast. The test measures total cholesterol, HDL, LDL, blood glucose and triglycerides. There have been many reports showing increase of numbers in the Native American population with Diabetes and cardiovascular disease. We also provide resources and education on cardio vascular disease, diabetes, family planning, WIC and HIV / AIDs. Fresh fruit / Vegetable vouchers will be given to each person doing the screening, when they return to the case manager for results and education. This will assist in the planning of healthy meals. Remember to fast 12 hrs before screening, to get accurate results.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna,

I lost a ring that was given to me from my daughter. Would you have any ideas where it could be? I really feel upset about it.

Feeling Bad

Dear Feeling Bad,

I see the ring underneath a dresser, caught between something and the wall. For some reason, I don't see you finding it for about three months, when it will be located.

Dear Anna,

I've recently had some issues in my life concerning court dates. My significant other is being taken to court over child support. The female that claims these children are his states that he does not want anything to do with them and that's not true. He isn't allowed to have visitation by her so I guess my question is: Are these children biologically his and what will the outcome in court be?

Do you see us having visitation with these children?

Worried about court

Dear Worried,

I see two children being his. He will be assigned child support. Visitation will be allowed on a reasonable basis. The relationship with his ex was not a very pleasant one, and the anger that resides there is not healthy for these children.

Please help your mate to understand that a grudge against the mother will only enhance his own difficulties with her and with his children.

People that are not meant to be together in life do not need to hold a grudge for the manner that they chose to escape the relationship. He didn't hate her when he met her and out of respect for her as a mother to his children and for the life forces they created together he Need to wash away his embitterment.

His ex needs to do the same thing. She is so angry about what didn't work out that she carries it with her everyday as part of her energy and attitude, and thereby is creating a future that will duplicate her past until she heals from the anger generated from her own unwillingness to let it go. You will find life a whole lot easier if you do not participate in enhancing his anger with his ex, by listening and not "adding to her sin list" with your comments.

You can release your anger and jealousy as they do not serve you in a good way. Remember, these children are sacred, make sure what hits their ears and hearts is sacred too.

Hey Anna,

I am 14 going on 15 and I still don't have a boyfriend and I am wondering what do you see in my future? Because you know all the girls in my class have boyfriends and still I don't. If you find anything please send me his name or something.

Do you see anybody liking me? I have a few crushes in my school but I am just wondering do you see anybody for me?

Or anywhere near liking me, you can say I'm not the average girl I am a little large but I still think this boyfriend thing is messing my life up because some boys in my school tease around with me but I don't find any of them liking me. Please anna I need your help on this one because I am very shy around boys, so if you can please send me his name please!!

Sincerely:damsel in distress

Dear DID,

Just keep everybody around you as your friend. A boyfriend or a girlfriend just for the sake of having one will lead to an imbalance. What I mean is if you're target is to have a "boyfriend" and that is what you are seeking, then you set yourself up for abuse.

You may place yourself in a place where you will do almost anything to keep him. That equals a bad start. Rather seek love, and wait and see what happens.

Love gentles the human spirit and releases the truth of who we are. I do see a mate for you, but not for quite a while. I also see a young man that has interest in you, he also carries more weight on him than is healthy. You are already his friend.

No names will be given in the paper, because then everybody would know. He is just a little taller than you, has dark hair, not real short, and I think he needs glasses sometimes. Don't worry, stick to your studies, get in shape for your body, mind and spirit, and go to college - where you will find the right relationship.

Dear Anna,

I am in a seven month relationship . I'm now six months pregnant. Me and my baby's dad are having troubles in our relationship . I'm scared it's not gonna work out for us. I don't want to be a single mom, but I feel he's seeing other women behind my back. Tell me what's going on . I don't want to give up on him. Please help.

Just don't know

Dear Just don't know,

There is a chance for you to heal this relationship. I don't think your baby's dad is really ready for the responsibility involved in a home and family.

He is just plain "freaking out." He runs around with friends, flirts, and parties to try to place his nagging fear aside. It is time for him to face himself, make a decision, get his act together, go back to school, work part time and make a plan for a successful future.

You also have to make a plan. Go back to school after the baby is born and learn a skill to support yourself and any and all children that you may have. It is not entirely up to the male in today's world to support the entire family without help. In the ideal world, mom gets to stay home for at least five years...but that is difficult to create so there have to be compromises.

If your boyfriend does not straighten out by July, then leave him. Let me grow up, and see about talking about having a relationship with him in four or five years. Oh, by the way, giving him hell every time he calls will not bring him home sooner - if at all. Gentle your spirit and talk to him, don't whine or use that special "tone" of voice. Good Luck

Remains finally come home

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - The ceremony to bury four newly repatriated Sicangu from the Denver Museum of Science was sad and, at the same time, a happy occasion for those assembled at the tribal council chambers on Friday, March 31.

RST councilman Russell Eagle Bear and Sicangu medicine man Roy Stone, Sr. had journeyed to Denver the weekend before to collect the remains of four Sicangu Lakota. The remains were that of an infant, a teenager and two adults. When they arrived at the museum, Stone prayed with the remains, as well as for other Native remains that were stored at the musueum.

On this day four bundles were prepared and laid out on a table with cloth of traditional Lakota colors of red, yellow, black and white and green. Afterward the bundles would be taken to a hilltop just east of the RST tribal building where they would be laid to rest after their long journey home.

The repatriation process had began on December 6, 2005 when Steven R. Holen of the Department of Anthropology wrote to the Rosebud Sioux tribe and described the human remains in their possession. In his letter he noted that under the Native American Graves Protection Act (25 USC 3003) possession of the remains were to be given over to the tribe and he proceeded to give their description. He wrote that between 1895-1897 the remains were, "removed from an unspecified area on or near the Rosebud Indian reservation." They included 16 small fragments, of long bones, five teeth, part of a mandible and two vertebrae of long bone.

In his letter Holen said the remains

Whereas, the Oglala Sioux Tribe firmly believes that all young children deserve excellent early care and education and that high quality early experiences make a difference in children's lifelong academic and social success.

Whereas, the Oglala Sioux Tribe is investing in a vibrant nation of healthy, achieving children and more stable families and support our parents as effective, loving parents to the next generation of children and that we must all work together to build a better learning environment for our youngest children.

Whereas, The Week of the Young Child is an annual celebration sponsored by the National Association for the Education of Young Children (NAEYC), the world's largest early childhood education association and the purpose of the Week of the Young Child is to focus attention on the needs of young children and their families and to recognize the early childhood programs and services that meet those needs.

RAPID CITY - Oglala Sioux Tribal President, Cecilia Fire Thunder held a teleconference March 31 which amounted to a national press conference where she demonstrated her support for building an abortion clinic within the Pine Ridge Reservation boundaries.

President Fire Thunder voiced her support for an initiative brought about not only by her, but by a growing number of supporters voicing concerns about the ramifications of a ban on all abortions in the state of South Dakota.

The state of South Dakota recently passed bill HB 1215 banning all abortions in the state. The ban will likely be challenged in the U.S. Supreme Court according to opponents. When asked about the governor's response to her position, Fire Thunder answered, "I don't expect the governor of South Dakota to respond, he hasn't been very cooperative with Indian tribes in the past. No I haven't heard from the governor."

Asked about the federal government's historical obligations and subsequent treatment pertaining to the tribe being abandoned by the United States Government, Fire Thunder said, "That's always a discussion at tribal leaders' meetings. The biggest role I play as a tribal leader is to make sure the government lives up to treaty and trust responsibility and we're always afraid that those meetings will end."

OST President Cecelia Fire Thunder

Fire Thunder stood by her position relative to the state and reiterated that she will donate her own personal land to establish an abortion clinic, that the project is in the planning stages and that she has substantial support across the reservation and throughout the nation.

Fire Thunder has a group of volunteers that are going door to door to gather 15,000 signatures that would force the issue into a state-wide referendum vote which may or may not overturn the state ban on abortions.

After fielding various questions concerning the highly debated abortion issue, she was asked about the COPS Grant and how the tribe may lose much needed law enforcement officers. The question held much relevance for the national media, who are obviously concerned about the issue of violence and death threats that inevitably surround abortion clinics nation-wide.

Fire Thunder enthusiastically assured them that she has secured a waiver on the COPS grant, that Public Safety will be funded for $1.5 million to carry out immediate obligations and that she's formulating a plan with all those involved within the next 45 days. She is also working with other tribal leaders to ensure future funding for the seven other cooperating South Dakota tribes.

Fire Thunder assured them that any protestors or outside agitators would be removed from the reservation and not be allowed back in. She repeatedly stated this was not a sovereignty issue, but about women and their rights.

When asked if she was asserting her authority as President of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, she said it was about women and the rights to her body and her choices.

She stated that she is proud to stand up for her nation and exert her power and status as tribal president to protect the rights of women world-wide, while exerting the sovereignty of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. She is proud to be leading the Great Lakota Nation in this national fight to protect women's rights.

Fire Thunder reiterates that, "The reason I stepped up to the plate and have used my status as Tribal President, is to show women that we can stand up and KYLE KYLE - Oglala Lakota College celebrated their 35th anniversary this past weekend in Kyle with an elder's forum on Friday, an honoring of the founders and a dance contest pow wow at Little Wound School.

"We have to take time to honor our heroes," said Tom Shortbull, president of Oglala Lakota College, on Saturday at Little Wound School in Kyle as the founders of the college were honored; "we need to honor those men and women that were responsible for the beginning of the college back in 1970, they are important to the college and to the entire nation."

OLC started in 1970 using borrowed buildings and volunteer staff as the Lakota Higher Education Center. As the college got its feet on the ground and set up shop in each district, the name changed to Oglala Sioux Community College and when the North Central Association accredited the reservation based college, it became Oglala Lakota College.

through age 8) lay the foundation for children's success in school and later life. The Week of the Young Child is a time to plan how we--as members of a community and a nation--will better meet the needs of all young children and their families.

Whereas, the Oglala Sioux Tribe encourages our parents, elders, teachers and schools to share in the responsibility with our children and ensuring the well being of children and families and to hereby renew our commitment as a nation to create opportunities that help all children and families succeed with a higher quality of early childhood education.

I, the 36th Oglala Sioux Tribe President, Cecelia Fire Thunder, do hereby proclaim April 2nd through April 8th as the Week of the Young Child for the Oglala Lakota Nation on the Pine Ridge Reservation and encourage everyone to promote awareness to improve early learning opportunities for our children, which are crucial to the growth and development of our young children and to building better futures for everyone on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

Colors are vivid as dancers participate in dance contest pow wow at Little Wound School during OLC's 35 year Celebration.

"In 1967, I remember we sent out letters to all of the South Dakota colleges and universities, asking for help on starting a college on the reservation," said Birgil Kills Straight, one of the founders honored on Saturday in Kyle; "not one school in the state said they would help but we heard from schools like Oregon University and the University of Colorado in Boulder that they would be willing to help-through CU we offered 15 college courses in the New Careers Program in Pine Ridge."

Shortbull talked about enrolling in the University of South Dakota in the mid 60's and out of 20 Indian students that started at the time, two stayed and earned a degree from the university. With a ninety per cent drop out rate off the reservation, a different strategy had to be found for higher education.

"Jim Hamm started the initial organizing in the fall of 1970, the tribe chartered the college in March of 1971," said Gerald One Feather, tribal president from 1970-72, an original founder and a prime mover of getting the college off the ground; "we did whatever we had to, to get the college off the ground, after working as tribal president, I would spend four nights a week teaching college courses."

Many people have mixed memories of Dick Wilson, tribal president from 1972-76, but he gave us everything we asked for and more, added Shortbull, he worked it out for us to set up the central office in the log cabin on the OCS campus and he helped us with double wide trailers for several of the college centers in the districts.

In addition to Norman Rogers who was in attendance and was the CAP director in Wanblee in the early 70's, those honored included Calvin Jumping Bull, Geraldine Janis, Hattie Twiss, Jacob Little Thunder, Alma Jacobs and Ray Howe.

Ed Young Man Afraid of His Horses and Robert Two Crow led the founders into the Little Wound gym, Kiyaksa Singers opened with an honoring song and the flag song and John Around Him provided an opening prayer.

Cecelia Fire Thunder, president of the Oglala Sioux Tribe and Newton Cummings, chair of the college's board of trustees opened the honoring ceremonies with a welcome.

OLC currently has an enrollment of 1,300 plus students across Pine Ridge Reservation and at the HeSapa center in Rapid City.

"We have seen a tremendous growth at our college and there are so many people to thank," said Cummings, "we have built a strong student base, we have added degree areas including a graduate degree; we have built permanent facilities in each community where we offer courses and now we are looking at building dorms in Kyle and Pine Ridge."

An elders forum opened the weekend activities on Friday and a dance contest and pow wow wrapped the events up on Saturday at Little wound school in Kyle.

Nebraska Supreme Court rules for liquor tore

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) -

The Nebraska Supreme Court said last Friday the state was wrong to deny a liquor license to a store in the border town of Whiteclay.

The high court rejected an appeal by the state Liquor Control Commission. It challenged a judge's decision allowing the son of a one-time Whiteclay beer store owner to obtain a liquor license to run the business.

A handful of stores in the village, which is just across the border from South Dakota's Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, sell millions of cans of beer annually - most of it to residents of the reservation.

Alcohol is barred from the reservation, a 5,000-square-mile expanse that is home to 15,000 Oglala Sioux and has one of the nation's highest alcoholism-related mortality rates.

Common alcohol offenses in Whiteclay include public consumption of alcohol, selling to intoxicated people, rules and regulations bootlegging onto the reservation, the sale of alcohol on credit, sale to minors, public intoxication, trespassing, assault and theft.

In November, Lancaster County District Judge Jeffre Cheuvront overturned a decision of the commission denying Jason Schwarting's application for a license to sell beer from the Arrowhead Inn. The inn has been run by the Schwarting family since 1980.

The commission said he was not fit or willing to conform to the commission's because of previous liquor law violations.

At the time of the 2004 hearing, Schwarting, who had worked in the store as a clerk, had been cited once in the previous four years.

The commission also said it believed there was a hidden ownership arrangement between Jason Schwarting and his father, Don Schwarting.

Don Schwarting lost his license to run the Arrowhead Inn after he was convicted of a felony for selling cars without a license.

State law does not allow a convicted felon to hold a liquor license.

Jason Schwarting's lawyer, Andrew Snyder, hailed the ruling, saying there are other license holders who have had more violations in a shorter period of time who have been allowed to continue in business.

Earlier this month, American Indian activists and others rallied in Rushville to oppose automatic renewal of liquor licenses for three remaining stores in Whiteclay.

The Sheridan County Board of Commissioners later passed a resolution automatically renewing the liquor licenses for the three stores.

Nine American Indians, including American Indian activist Russell Means, were arrested in July 1999 as hundreds of Oglala Sioux marched from the reservation to Whiteclay. They were protesting the beer sales and the unsolved murders of Wilson Black Elk Jr., 40, and Ronald Hard Heart, 39, whose bodies were found in a culvert near the South Dakota-Nebraska state line.

demand the right to choose. Women of America have the obligation to stand for all women of the world."

When asked if she had consulted the elderly and medicine men, she said, "Yes, I've consulted with many elderly women and medicine women and they said abortion was a practice that the Oglala historically practiced."

She went on to say that according to her knowledge and that of the elders there were natural ways in which this was conducted.

Fire Thunder announced the name of her new clinic as Sacred Choices Clinic.

When asked if she could say anything to the President of the United States, concerning any and all issues pertaining to the Pine Ridge reservation, she said, "President Bush, there is more to America than Texas and there's more to America than Washington, D.C. I think the president is really out of touch with America."

The New York based National Planned Parenthood spokesperson added that they are more than willing and able to help with financial resources, yet still voiced concerns about the safety of clinical personnel and the tribes' ability to protect them. President Fire Thunder assured them that this issue is being addressed.

Fire Thunder stated that she's adamant about following federal and tribal law. No website has been established yet, but you can reach President Fire Thunder at firethunder_president@yahoo.com came, "Into the possession of Jesse H. Bratley, a teacher at the Lower Cut Meat school. He died in 1948 and his daughter sold the remains to Francis V. Crane who donated them in 1983 to the museum." The remains apparently were collected from the ground surface. Eagle Bear, who served as the host for the ceremony explained that remains had originally been placed on a burial scaffold above ground and had fallen to the ground over time. Victor Douville, a Lakota historian from the SGU Lakota Studies Department also supported this notion.

Leonard Crow Dog spoke at length at the efforts to properly repatriate the remains. He said, "Who gave the white teacher permission to take the remains." He noted that they were already in the happy hunting grounds and should not be spoken of in terms of heaven or hell or judgment day. Even though the remains were unidentified he noted that they had names and the power of their spirit is something one cannot analyze.

They were given the name, "Tatanka Najin" (Standing Bull) and it was the name they were buried with as we are all related to them.

Eagle Bear said, "We don't know who they are. We are not going to send them into the spirit world without a name." The drum group "Eagle Mountain" sang several songs to help them continue on their journey. He noted that it was important to educate the young ones about this ceremony, which was a learning experience for all. Photographs were allowed to be taken, but not during any of the traditional songs or prayers.

Duane Hollow Horn Bear of SGU spoke in Lakota and translated into English he said, "You are all feeling bad at the white institution. They made us feel sad. We do not know them, but we will talk to their spirit, if lost, we will send them to their relatives."

Hollow Horn Bear said that speculation could continue for a long time as to who the people were. Where did they come from and what if they came back from the Little Big Horn battle? Whatever the questions were the remains needed to be set free. Chief High Hawk of the Wajaja band is buried north of the location where the remains were found and the remains were likely part of that band.

Douville of SGU noted that it was a sad, yet happy day and their spirits were probably restless for the ordeal they were subjected to in finally coming home. Medicineman Sam Wounded Head said in Lakota, "Lakol wicohan ki suta, woiyukan waste luha. Dakomni otehi.Wacekiunkiciyapi iyuskinya tokatakiya." He said, "The Lakota way is strong and the intentions and thoughts are good. It is going to be tough. We will pray so that they will be happy in the future."

SGU president Lionel Bordeaux also spoke of a time long ago when the Lakota first encountered the presence of long horn cattle in Lakota country. He said, "whether they were born in the 1800's, 1850's or 1870's, those were turbulent times for our people. They began to see something happening that was not going to be good."

Hollow Horn Bear said that speculation could continue for a long time as to who the people were. Where did they come from and what if they came back from the Little Big Horn battle?

Florentine Blue Thunder also spoke entirely in Lakota about the ceremony. Eagle Bear closed the ceremony by noting that there should have been thousands of people at the ceremony, which saw some fifty, or more in attendance. The four bundles were carried out to a waiting vehicle as Eagle Mountain sang and they were carried to a nearby hill as they completed their journey home; Eagle Bear said it was a learning experience for all.

Wilson-Pine opens 2006 track season with 3200 win

O'Bryan places in 100, 200

BY TOM CRASH
Times Sports Correspondent

BOX ELDER - Alex Wilson-Pine, a junior at Pine Ridge High School, won the 3200 meter run and took fourth in the 1600 on Saturday at the Douglas Early Bird track meet in Box Elder. Wilson-Pine won the State A Cross Country championship this past fall and Saturday he served notice that he will be a factor in the upcoming track sesson in the distance races.

Marissa O'Bryan, a senior at Red Cloud, has set her sights on the100 and 200 and developing into a long jumper in preparation for a possible college track opportunity at the University of South Dakota. On Saturday, O'Bryan opened the season with a personal best 27.1 in the 200 and a fourth place, a 13.20 and fifth place in the 100 and a ninth in the long jump.

"We are really happy with Marissa's first meet," said Matt Rama, Red Cloud track coach, "our students only had two days outside before this meet and O'Bryan has put some work into the preseason and it shows, we are going to work on her form and the start and we should only get better from here."

Sophia Janis of Pine Ridge took 21st and Crystal Apple of Little Wound was 28th in the 100. Little Wound's Erin Boyce was fourth in the 800 and 16th in the 400 while her sister Julie was tenth in the 400 and 13th in the 800. Lisa Ferguson/LW took 18th in the 400 while Summer Christenson/LW was 12th in the 800 and 14th in the 1600.

Bobby Janis/PR was sixth in the 100, Johnny Clous/LW was 32nd , Jeff Pourier/PR was 34th and Orlando Fineran/LW was 36th. In the 200, Desmond Ridhards/LW was 27th and Matt Janis was 31st.

Public involvement hearings set up for road through Wounded Knee

WOUNDED KNEE - Following a decision by the tribal council to set up one or two listening sessions in Wounded Knee before any decision is made about the route of a new road through Wounded Knee and the massacre site, four hearings were set up to get input from residents of Wounded Knee, the community and the district and interested community members from across the reservation.

Hearings start on Monday, April 10th at the CAP office in Manderson at 1pm. On Tuesday, April 11th, the hearing will be at the Wounded Knee Community Center at 6pm and on Wednesday, April 12th the hearing is set for Wounded Knee District School in Manderson at 3:30pm with the last hearing set for the Fire Lightning Tiospaye Tipi in Wounded Knee on Friday, April 14th at 10am.

Residents of Wounded Knee are encouraged to participate in the hearings and have their opinions heard. The tribal council asked that the input be returned to the council within 30 days so a decision on the route of the reconstructed BIA Highway 27can be made in time so the work is not held up any more.

According to Jeff Whelan, transportation director, $10 million has been appropriated to complete the reconstruction project.

Lakota media has obligation to access information

We survived the harsh winter weather and LIHEAP funds came through most of the time. It is a valuable program for the needy and many Lakota tribes need to continue to fund the program next year through their own budgets. We tried to connect with the office of Senator Tim Johnson in a planned conference call to get a sense of the budget cuts, which will ultimately impact Lakota people on the northern plains, but he was tied up in committee discussions on agriculture. We will make an attempt to reconnect perhaps this week.

It points out the tremendous need for the Native print and broadcast media to access the data that will keep tribal citizens informed of those things, which will immediately have an influence in their lives. Making such up to date and informed choices requires sound judgment on our part and we hope to live up to that responsibility.

We recognize that the landscape that is the 'news' is forever changing. We focus on newsworthy events and people who are making a difference in Lakota country, while emphasizing that language and culture is important to us. Some news stories can be repetitive and it is incumbent upon certain media outlets to recognize that not all Lakota people want to hear news that speaks of someone's misfortune or hardship. We hope that focusing on the movers and shakers in Lakota country, examining innovations, and presenting the positive influences and ideas of role models is what will create an enduring impression.

Making preparations for the April 15 tax filing deadline is important as we need to take time to secure our needed documents such as, social security cards, W-2's, 1099's and to make sure we are clear on the deductions we might qualify for.

Things to empower yourself

Our character is formed early

By Patty Pourier

"From prebirth to the age of 7 our characters are formed, " according Drs. Nancy and Ron Rockey. "If a traumatic event happens between these ages, the emotional and character formations in our brain are dwarfed (stunted) at that age."

After hearing this at a lecture I attended last weekend, I saw why progress is hard to make on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation.

With 80% alcoholism- it could be assumed that 80% of children on the reservation are traumatized by an alcoholic during the birth to age 7 years of life. And if what they say is true, that would mean we would have people that appear to be adults, running around in adult sized bodies, with characters and emotions of a pre-school aged child.

After being around for a while, I tend to agree with the Rockey's. Many times I see the tribal council, employees, and some of my own relative's actions resemble those more of a 5 year olds than the adult they seemingly are.

Stop and think about your behavior in the past 6 months, are there times that it resembled a child rather than an adult?

I also learned that we don't fall in love with a person, we fall in love with our dysfunctional equal. OUCH! That hurts. This is saying that we are just as emotionally damaged as the person we chose to spend the rest of our life with. Or another way of saying it is, we are as emotionally healthy as the people we are attracted to. No matter how you say it- it boils down to being just as sick as the person we love. No more looking at our significant other and seeing how they need to change--according to our lector- the need for healing would be equal between two mates.

The good news is, if you are teachable, you are fixable. You do have worth and value and you are worth fixing. Stop looking around you, pointing fingers and look in the mirror.

Thank you letter to Cecelia Fire Thunder

An Open Letter to Cecelia Fire Thunder

Dear Editor:

I just wanted to thank Cecelia from the bottom of my heart as a woman, a citizen, a sister of light and a human being, for her actions….I don't even live in South Dakota, but I have followed the nonsense going on there with great interest as I am worried for our freedoms as a nation with the direction many states and of course, federally, that this nation is going.

Will you please let the honored Cecilia know how much her courage is appreciated and applauded from a distant land…I live in Chumash territory.

Thanks for writing so well of the news…I think we should pass the idea along to other tribal areas as a solution if it continues to happen.

Many thanks and peace to you all
Teresa

Oglala Sioux Tribe
"Week of the Young Child"
3rd Proclamation of President Fire Thunder

Whereas, the Oglala Sioux Tribe believes in the importance of children's earliest years in shaping their learning and development and feels this is the time to recognize that children's opportunities are our responsibilities, and to recommit ourselves to ensuring that each and every child experiences the type of early environment--at home, at child care, at school, and in the community--that will promote their early learning.

Whereas, the Oglala Sioux Tribe firmly believes that all young children deserve excellent early care and education and that high quality early experiences make a difference in children's lifelong academic and social success.

Whereas, the Oglala Sioux Tribe is investing in a vibrant nation of healthy, achieving children and more stable families and support our parents as effective, loving parents to the next generation of children and that we must all work together to build a better learning environment for our youngest children.

Whereas, The Week of the Young Child is an annual celebration sponsored by the National Association for the Education of Young Children (NAEYC), the world's largest early childhood education association and the purpose of the Week of the Young Child is to focus attention on the needs of young children and their families and to recognize the early childhood programs and services that meet those needs.

Whereas, NAEYC first established the Week of the Young Child in 1971, recognizing that the early childhood years (birth through age 8) lay the foundation for children's success in school and later life. The Week of the Young Child is a time to plan how we--as members of a community and a nation--will better meet the needs of all young children and their families.

Whereas, the Oglala Sioux Tribe encourages our parents, elders, teachers and schools to share in the responsibility with our children and ensuring the well being of children and families and to hereby renew our commitment as a nation to create opportunities that help all children and families succeed with a higher quality of early childhood education.

I, the 36th Oglala Sioux Tribe President, Cecelia Fire Thunder, do hereby proclaim April 2nd through April 8th as the Week of the Young Child for the Oglala Lakota Nation on the Pine Ridge Reservation and encourage everyone to promote awareness to improve early learning opportunities for our children, which are crucial to the growth and development of our young children and to building better futures for everyone on the Pine Ridge Reservation.

More support for President Fire Thunder

Dear Editor:

I just read this story in the San Francisco Chronicle, and I immediately went online to see if I could find an email address to show my support for Cecelia Fire Thunder and her brilliant idea to use the reservation's sovereignty to aid women in their right to choose whether or not to give birth. I would like to donate money to this cause. If you have any information about how to donate, please let me know or forward this letter to the appropriate people.

Sincerely,

Letter to Mead County Commissioners

" Protect Bear Butte"

To The Meade County Commissioners:

I would like to make one final request that you take the first steps to protect Bear Butte and deny Jay Allen's request for a malt beverage permit at that location. I ask you to respectfully consider the following actions:

Please be brave and recognize that there is something that each of you can do right now to protect the legacy of Bear Butte for the current generations and to those that we will pass along our legacy.

1. Deny the permit as it is not currently seen as a suitable location. Bear Butte holds very special meaning to most who have come to know it as a Local, State and National place of spiritual, cultural and social meanings. It is a beacon in our community and deserves your protection.

2. I ask you to call for a gathering of State, City, County and Federal political leaders and members of the SD Game Fish and Parks Commission. In addition to these people to bring to this gathering Local Residents, Local Ranchers, Local Home Owners and Citizens, Tribal Representatives, Campground Owners and other interested parties. Bring all these people together in a local forum and as a group to pay a visit to the Butte and then discuss the future of Bear Butte in light of the recent commercial and urban growth that threatens its place as a local Beacon On The Prairie in Meade County.

There is the newly passed SD HB 1161[http://legis.state.sd.us/sessions/2006/DisplayBill.aspx]. Let us discuss as a community what is a relevant action, if any, to take to under this new and thoughtful piece of legislation

3. It is clear the Community is concerned and wants there to be more discourse on what is to be the future of Bear Butte. To allow this project to move forward without this discourse would be abandoning the trust placed in each of you by the community when they elected you to the positions of responsibility that I know each of you takes very seriously. If after a thorough exchange on this issue, the Community as a whole desires for Jay Allen to build the Sturgis Version of "Disney World" . . . then so be it. If Jay Allen truly desires to be a part of the Community, then he should be willing to wait a while longer to realize his dreams.

These are actions we can take together as a community. I encourage you to have the courage to stand in front of your community and take the lead in protecting what we all hold special in our community. . . . the right to stand together as a community and defend what is ours.

Lakota Insights gained through sharing

Dr. Archie Beauvais (nagik sapa) Sicangu Lakota, is a decorated Vietnam Veteran with a Doctor of Education (Ed.D) degree from Harvard University and resides on the Rosebud.

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

Lakota ceremony and insights are gained through sharing

I was able to witness the repatriation efforts as coordinated by Rosebud Sioux Tribe councilman Russell Eagle Bear. It was a valuable experience for the younger Sicangu Lakota. It was as Russell said; there certainly should have been more people in attendance to pay their respects. The prayers and insights shared at the ceremony were mostly in Lakota and that, in and of itself, is a valuable lesson these days.

It is not likely that you will see three highly regarded Sicangu medicine men on one occasion, lending their integrity, cultural wisdom, and Lakota prayers. That fact is scary as one-day things will change and the complexion of Lakota society will also change. Lionel Bordeaux spoke of the fact that we do not know what circumstances will look like years from now and what impact the actions we are seeing, will have in the future.

Leonard Crow Dog spoke of a similar issue when he said that we do not know a person may have left behind or what he did, but when he dies we do know that he has traveled to a place that is neither heaven nor hell, as Christians describe it. He says that that person is not sitting in purgatory somewhere waiting for judgment day, so we should not see it that way. It was a valuable way to underscore the Lakota manner of thinking of the after life.

When outsiders come to such ceremonies, it is a great honor, and there is an obligation to ask about the proper protocol. In such a setting, one should never ask the elders and medicine men to line up for a 'photo op.' When that happens, you can imagine every Lakota cringing in the room, but doing it quietly so that the moment is not made even more awkward. Just as mainstream media are sometimes ignorant of cultural protocol, so is border town media.

Those of us who have grown up here know that cultural protocol all too well, especially around the elders. Of course, it may be the obligation of the event sponsors to also tell the people what is acceptable behavior and what is not. The main thing is not to anger or upset some of the elders attendance as they have a strict sense of what their expectations are without having to drill into our heads.

Eagle Bear also said that it was a learning experience for all and that is a great reason for the young to listen to and observe such cultural experiences. It is especially valuable when the public is able to listen into and understand what is occurring.

There is hope that more repatriated items and remains will be returned to their respective homelands. Can you imagine Lakota people hording the bones of white people in our museums for anthropological study? It would never happen as we have much respect for the dearly departed. Also, I believe that Lakota people would prefer to leave things undisturbed instead of having someone's property or remains languishing in some mausoleum far from home.

It brings up the age-old argument, however, between putting on display ancient cultures and possessions and leaving the artifacts undisturbed. I still don't know how that works. "Tos duwa ihanni wiconi iyustan hantas dakuku yahupi, hena ta pi, ca iyustanpi waste'. Doku yahapi, duweni iwozasni ca etanpsni waste." (In English, for example, if someone dies, what they have is theirs so we should leave their possessions alone. What they have, no one has control over and it would be good if they were not touched.)

Notes From Indian Country

Watching the Mayflower drop anchor

Notes from Indian Country

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

There was a cartoon floating around Indian country several years ago of two Indian men crouched on a hill watching the Mayflower dropping anchor in what is now Plymouth Rock.

In the cartoon one Indian is saying to the other, "Do you think we should start thinking about creating some immigration laws?"

Of course, the cartoon was funny then and is funny now. The Indians in the cartoon were attired in the regalia of the Indians of the Northern Plains, but I suppose that is how most Americans see Indians in general never mind that the Indians of the East Coast dressed in an entirely different manner.

I would venture to say that no other segment of the American population was affected by immigration as much as the American Indian. Lands occupied for centuries by the indigenous people were opened up (stolen) and a flood of settlers converged wiping out the livelihood of the people and forcibly removing many tribal groups to unwanted and unproductive lands.

What caused the infamous Trail of Tears? It was the greed of the immigrant settlers salivating over the rich farmlands and homes of the Cherokee people. With the full support of the United States government thousands of happy and productive Indian families were uprooted from their homelands and marched to Oklahoma Territory. Many of the elders and young died on this infamous death march. A lot of recent immigrants profited from this callous takeover of Indian lands.

Since 9/11 the American people have been taking a second look at the porous borders between the United States and Mexico. Congress is atwitter with grandiose ideas about how to stem the flow of illegal immigrants. But the one factor looming largest in the newly hatched schemes is greed. Farms and factories would have serious economic problems if their source of cheap labor were suddenly cut off.

Latin American immigrants, legal and otherwise, have staged mass protests in hopes of changing the minds of the lawmakers set upon bringing new laws to curb illegal immigration. I find it a little ironic that the protestors are flying American flags upside down while vigorously waving the flag of Mexico.

I often wonder why so many thousands of people left their homelands in Norway, Germany, Ireland, France and so many other countries to settle in a land where the only obstacle to expansion and untold wealth was the indigenous people. How many Americans are aware of the fact that thousands of Indians were shipped to the lands in the West Indies as slaves? There they died by the thousands and they also died by the thousands while being used as slave labor in the newly formed Colonies. Unable to find the cheap labor for the cotton fields of America and the sugar cane fields of the West Indies, black Africans were rounded up by the millions and brought to America as slave-immigrants.

America found it hard to classify Native Americans in those days. They were not citizens of the United States and they were not immigrants. What were they? They were an obstacle standing in the path of Manifest Destiny. Their lands had to be taken illegally or purchased in order to make room for the influx of immigrants.

If America is a shining beacon of hope for legal immigrants perhaps the laws should be adjusted to make it a reality for the illegal immigrants. They also see America as a place where dreams can be lived. Ironically, most of the illegal immigrants are Indians, or Indios as they are known in Mexico, and in Central and South America. Most of their ancestors did not come over on the Mayflower or on the Spanish galleons. They were indigenous to the Western Hemisphere.

I admit being surprised when I visited Spain and observed that the people did not look like the indigenous people of the Americas and their restaurants did not serve enchiladas and tacos. No, the brown people of the Americas are Indios and their cuisine of hot chili peppers and tortillas are also indigenous foodstuffs. I still hear people say they are going to a certain restaurant to eat "Spanish food." What would the cuisine of Italy be without a vegetable grown by the Indios called the "tomato?" For that matter all of the chocolate connoisseurs attending the Winter Olympics in Turin, Italy would not have had that succulent treat if not for the indigenous people of the Americas.

If the citizens of Mexico and other Latin American countries want to immigrate to America they should do it legally even though the first immigrants faced no such provisions. If there were no jobs available, they would not come. The first immigrants would not have come if there were no land available. And as Molly Ivins suggested in her column today, simply arrest those people doing the hiring and it would effectively end illegal immigration.

It is written that many of the original immigrants came to this country in search of freedom of religion. It is a sad chapter in our history that although they found freedom of religion they chose to suppress and destroy the religions of the indigenous people.

Many Indians look at that cartoon of the two Indians watching the Mayflower drop anchor and wonder "what if?"

Busch, High Wolf, Eastman, Kratovil earn All State honors

By Tom Crash
Times Sports Correspondent

RAPID CITY - Sunni Busch, a 5'9" senior at Todd County, averaged 20.7 points per game and led her Lady Falcons to an 18-5 record this year, losing to Bennett County in the Region 7A championship game, one game short of going to State A tournament for the second year in a row. Busch earned first team Class A All State honors for the second straight year.

"It was such a delight to coach Sunni the last three years," said Chuck Wilson, Todd County head coach, "She has such determination to win and be competitive, she played every position on the floor for us at one time or another; she makes every person on the team a better ball player."

Abby Kratovil, a senior at Bennett County, joined Busch on the Class A All State first team as she led the Warriors to a fifth place and the consolation championship at this year's State A tourney in Mitchell. Abby moved up from the third team last year, averaging 18.8 pints a game along with 10.3 rebounds a game.

Kratovil has already signed to attend school at South Dakota State University in Brookings and play basketball for the Jackrabbits who just completed their second season in NCAA Division I with a 19-9 season record and coming up just short of a WNIT bid for postseason play.

Michelle Amundson of State A champion Dell Rapids, Ashley Johnson/Stickney-Mt. Vernon, both seniors and Kristin Rotert, a junior from McCook Central joined Busch and Kratovil on the first team.

Second team included: Krista Rabenberg/Mobridge, Maggie Malloy/Parkston, Amber Wollschlager/Milbank, Lacey Powell/Parkston and Allison Johnson/Stickney-Mt. Vernon.

The third team included: Lennea Mueller/Custer, Brit Fuhrman/Mobridge, Annie Roche/Vermillion, Ashley Mailley/Dell Rapids and Abby Plucker/Parker.

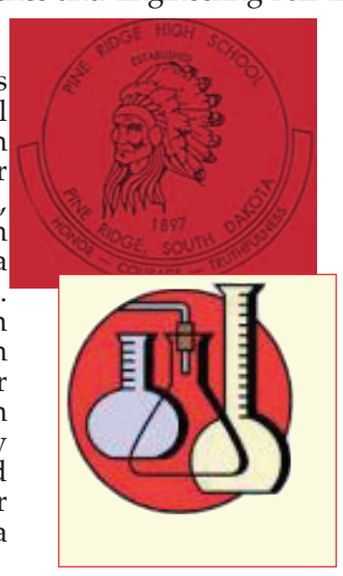
Cheyenne Eagle Butte's Daelan High Wolf was named to the first team Class A All State today joining Zach Finley of State A champs St. Thomas More, Zach Seefeldt of State A runner-up, Clark, Bryce Kruetzfeldt of Chester Area and Ryan Dix of Aberdeen Roncali.

"High Wolf just loves the game and has put the time in to develop his skills," said Jess Mendoza, Cheyenne Eagle Butte head coach, "He has been a positive role model for all of his teammates as he shows everyone what it takes to succeed at the high school level but what it takes to play at the next level as well."



Daelan averaged 27.5 points per game, 10 rebounds a game along with 4.5 assists and four steals. Although it is not set, High Wolf is looking at attending Haskell Indian Nations University in Lawrence, Kansas in the fall. Eagle Butte lost to Mobridge in the District 12A championship game this year.

Second team Class A All State honors went to Kyle Doerr/St. Thomas More, Cedric Seefeldt/Clark, Matt Malloy/Parkston, Adam Holt/Redfield and Michael Prince/Miller Area while third team Class A All State honors go to Billy Hardcastle/Mobridge, Drew Reuman/Lyman, Ethan Friesz/Chamberlain, Daschle Larson of Elk Point-Jefferson and Randall Velgersdyk.

Duran Eastman, a senior at Tiospa Zina, was selected to the Class B All State second team today by the South Dakota Sportswriters Association; he was on the third team last year. Averaging 14.2 point per game, 6.8 rebounds and 3.6 assists, Eastman led his team to the Region 1B championship game, losing to Doland-Conde. He plans to attend North Dakota State College of Science in Wahpeton and play both football and basketball. "The coaches feel with work and dedication, Duran has the potential to be a Division I wide receiver," said Eric Heath, Tiospa Zina coach.

Shannon County School District Celebrates Week of the Young Child

BATELAND - Shannon County School District celebrates Week of the Young Child April 2-8 to recognize the needs of young children and thank educators and others involved in building better futures for all children. Week of the Young Child is celebrated across the country by hundreds of local organizations working to improve opportunities for all young children.

"Early learning experiences are crucial to the growth and development of young children," said Shannon Country School Districts Early Reading First Coordinator, Can di Foltz-Hall. "Week of the Young Child provides opportunities for all of us to recognize the importance of the early years, and to work together to build better futures for all children" she said.

The Shannon County School District located on the Pine Ridge reservation offers all day preschool at Rockyford, Wolf Creek and Batesland Schools. After the United States Department of Education awarded the only Early Reading First Grant in South Dakota to SCSD, the district was able to increase from three certified early childhood teachers to seven. The number of children enrolled increased from 55 to 130. Research shows that high-quality early childhood programs help children, especially those from families with low-incomes, to develop the skills they need to succeed in school, including language, pre-mathematics and social-emotional skills. A preschool child should learn two new vocabulary words a day, imbedded into their daily life. Shannon Country School District is a public school district serving 1,028 students from pre-K through 8th grade in a rural, remote, high-poverty reservation area.

To celebrate the Week of the Young Child, the children will see a 'Dragons Are Too Seldom Puppet Show" and have a visit from the Police, Fire and Ambulance service.

Across the country, young children and their families depend on quality education and care which help chil-

Mato Luta, Porcupine, Lil Thorpes crowned in 18th BJ Weston tournament

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

PORCUPINE - For the 18th year, teams came to Porcupine to honor the memory of BJ Weston who was killed by a drunk driver and to celebrate life and basketball as 48 teams in three divisions competed for the team championships and individual honors in the BJ Weston Memorial Pee Wee Basketball Tournament at Porcupine School. Mato Luta knocked off the Braves 52-47 to win the 13-15 championship, Porcupine edged the Hot Shots 41-34 for the 10-12 title and the Lil Thorpes wore down the Wizards 23-19 for the 7-9 year old crown.

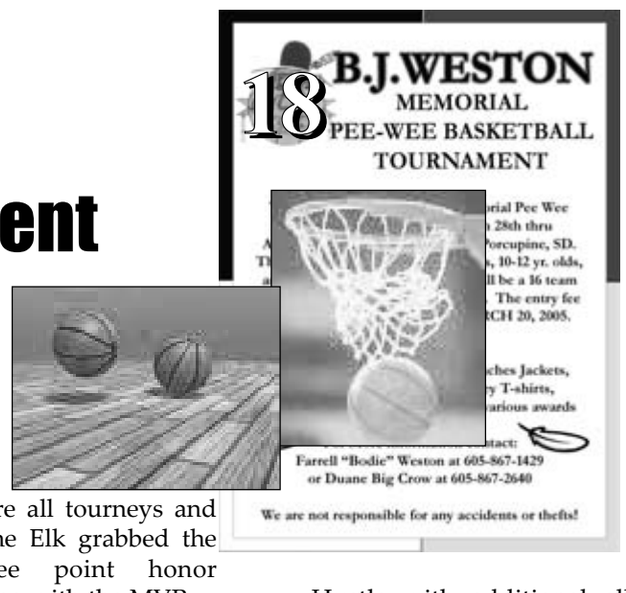
The house was rocking Sunday night as a full house came to Porcupine School to cheer on their teams and watch basketball played with enthusiasm and unchecked energy each game. The Braves set the tone for the three championship games by winning an overtime semi final 69-64 over Da Bulls, a game that brought the crowd to their feet several times and set the stage for the championship round.

The Braves, featuring seven ballplayers from the Big Foot Conference champs, Our Lady of Lourdes Braves and Lacey Weston from the Pine Ridge Thorpes and Marque Lunderman from Red Cloud, struggled in the first quarter as Billy Scott led Mato Luta to an 18-8 lead at the end of the first. Scott, finishing up his sophomore year at Red Cloud, scored six more points in the second to go with six in the first while Carl Swallow and Kiley Weston led the Braves back to within one 28-27 at the half. Swallow drove the lane for three strong baskets and Weston knocked down a two and a three to help the Braves get back in the game.

The Braves outscored Mato Luta six to two to take a 33-30 lead in the third period before Scott hit two baskets and Orin Three Stars added a lay-up to put Mato Luta back up 36-33 at the end of three. Swallow hit a two and a three in the fourth and Lacey Weston put in five of her nine points in the fourth to help the Braves to a 47-46 lead midway through the fourth. Kevin Eagle Heart, Three Stars and Scott kept the pressure on with two baskets each to help close out the Braves and win the championship 52-47 by scoring the last six points of the game.

Scott finished with 20 points and 12 rebounds and earned the MVP award, Three Stars helped with 12 points and Eagle Heart added eight points and nine rebounds, both earning all tourney honors. Swallow hit a double double with 13 points and 10 rebounds while Kiley Weston and Brier Iron Cloud both chipped in ten each and Lacey Weston added nine, all three earned all tourney honors and Swallow won the most three points award.

Da Bulls, led by all tourneys Michael Cuny and Cubby Two Lance took third while the Running Sioux took fourth with Jacob Pond and Ron Leftwich named all tourneys.



Mato Luta coach, Isaac Red Bear, earned the outstanding coach award while Ezra Zephier and Marque Lunderman were named the Mr. And Ms Hustle award winners. Additional all tourney nods went to Jeremy Black Lance/The Finest, Steve Vitalis/Blue Devils and Carmen Bull Bear.

Down at the end of the first 11-7 and 21-19 at the half, Porcupine used a 17-0 run from late in the third to deep in the fourth to overtake the Hot Shots and win the 10-12 division 41-34. Tyler Lone Elk did not score in the first period but finished the game with a game high 15 points and nine rebounds to lead Porcupine to the championship and earn MVP along the way.

"We honor BJ's memory, we provide a positive event for our youth and we deliver a powerful message about the dangers of drunk and drugged driving," concluded Weston."

Lyle Jacobs led the Hot Shots with 13 points and five rebounds but needed more help from his teammates, Chris Tobacco helped with five points and Shaq Ten Fingers added four; all three earned all tourney honors.

Gene Kaline helped Porcupine with four points, seven rebounds and five steals, Dan Whirlwind Horse chipped in 10 points while Ernest Weston hit 10 points and grabbed 12 rebounds; Kaline and Whirlwind Horse were all tourneys and Lone Elk grabbed the three point honor along with the MVP.

Twila Standing Elk, Porcupine's coach, was selected as outstanding coach, Adonis Saltes was Mr. Hustle and Paige Provost Bettelyoun was Ms. Hustle. The Kings took third, the Running Wizards took fourth and all tourney honors also went to Eric Kills Enemy/Bulls, Charlie Spotted Eagle/Wizards, Francis Around Him/KT Ballers, Jeff LeBeau and Jacob Frown/Def Jam and Derrick Tyon/Ball Hogs.

After being down the entire game, Samantha Weston scored four of her game high ten points in the fourth quarter to help the Wizards tie up the game at 19 a piece late in the fourth. Brannon Cousin came off the bench in the second half and hit three field goals in the fourth including the final two baskets to give the Lil Thorpes a four point win 23-19 and the championship of the 7-9 year old division.

Gabe Chief Eagle scored five points and pulled down ten rebounds to anchor the Lil Thorpes in the paint and earn the MVP award while Walter Cournoyer added six points and four rebounds and an all tourney nod. Aaron Black Bull and Jordan Phelps earned all tourney honors and Cecelia Two Lance was named Ms Hustle.

Magic earned third place honors and Little Braves were fourth while Duana Bissonette of the Lil Thorpes was the outstanding coach. Michael Brae won the three point competition and RJ of Rambling Wreck was Mr. Hustle with additional all tourney awards going to Shalene Richards and Kirkland Ross/Lil Thorpes, Jay Oliveras and Colton O'Rourke/Def Jam, Jacob Dreamer and Michael Long/Magic, Latrel Richards/Mato Luta, Nathaniel Brown Bull/KT Ballers and Davey Clifford/Little Braves.

"This was a great BJ Tourney and I can't thank the family and all the volunteers enough for all of their help," said Bodie Weston, tournament coordinator, "we work hard all year to get ready, it is a lot of work by everyone and it goes by so fast."

The tournament was started to honor the memory of BJ Weston who was killed north of Wounded Knee by a drunk driver. Alex Wilson Pine, a junior at Pine Ridge high school and the 2005 State A cross country champ was honored during a halftime and entertained the crowd with a break-dance demonstration. Sadie In the Woods, a senior at Little Wound was also honored at the halftime; she has been accepted by Duke University for the 2006/2007 school year.

"We honor BJ's memory, we provide a positive event for our youth and we deliver a powerful message about the dangers of drunk and drugged driving," concluded Weston.

Sicangu Lakota singer Howard Bad Hand on sharing music and culture.....

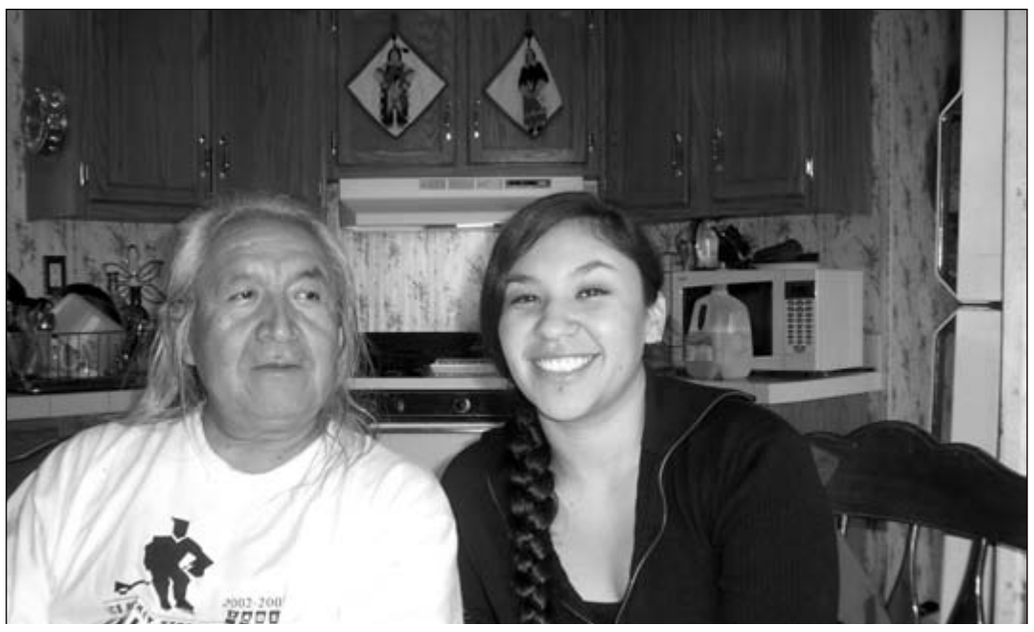
BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Howard Bad Hand was back on the Rosebud with his daughter, Erin, who is wrapping up her thesis stage for her Master of Fine Arts (MFA) from the School of the Art Institute of Chicago. The father and daughter had traveled to Rosebud to pursue Erin's research topics and interviews and to check on Howard's father, Willie Bad Hand, who is in the hospital in Sioux Falls after being ill.

Life's journey for Bad Hand has been an interesting one since the time he discovered that Lakota music is something that he had a gift for. He recalls at a very early age being able to compose songs and carrying them around in his head. He is fluent in Lakota and this is reflected in the many songs, which he has composed.



Bad Hand spent his early years in the Red Leaf community, which was six to eight miles south of present day Norris. There is not much evidence of the community today and at one time, it was within the borders of the Pine Ridge reservation. Bad Hand explained how the drum group evolved over several generations from its beginning in Red Leaf community to the way the Red Leaf Takoja drum group eventually gave their name back to the original group.

The Red Leaf singers from Two Strike community are comprised of Pat Bad Hand, father Willie Bad Hand, brothers Dale, Alphonso, and Lee, Sons Ray, JB, Wopila and JR. Pat occasionally gets help from Howard, Tom Teegarden, Ernie Running, Londell Sea Boy and other well known singers when they are in the area.

The drum group Red Leaf was originally started by grandfather Joe Bad Hand, and Tom and Fred Two Sticks of the Red Leaf/Black Pipe communities. In the 1970's the group seemed to enjoy the height of its popularity on the northern plains and on the Rosebud. Its members at that time were Willie Bad Hand, Percy Bad Hand, Roy Bad Hand, Burgess Yellow Cloud, Dennis Charging Hawk, and Max Flying Horse along with their sons.

Bad Hand attended prep school in Lenox, Mass., and studied at Dartmouth College and Harvard University in the 1970's. He helped to reorganize the RST tribal education department and worked as the Program Analyst for the National Indian Health Board in Denver, CO before heading to Taos, NM with his family. He currently does consulting work and teaches about spirituality and the sharing of culture. He along with Joe Marshall and Charles White Buffalo, provided technical assistance to the movie, "Into the West" as a vocal coach, singing and dancing advisor.

He admits to being connected to his family through music as he said, "What I learned about my people, I learned through music. Everything we do is through song, spiritual and social." He revived the spinoff group called the Red Leaf Takoja drum (started by Percy Bad Hand) along with Tom Teegarden which continues to enjoy its own popularity nationally as well as in Taos, NM and in the southwest.

Bad Hand was asked about the sharing of Lakota spirituality, song and culture in a day and age when many people throughout the world are attracted to the culture and language of Lakota people. He admits there is some exploitation on all sides; however, he feels that such things know no color or boundary.

He said, "All of us have a responsibility, a vision to bring some element to manifestation." About ceremony, he said, "Every ceremony is different because every leader is following a vision and it is different for each. The common element is the pipe and it teachings and how you use the objects depends on the vision."

He says that the sacred objects that are used in ceremony are not the points of power, just the representation of that power.

Bad Hand spoke of the role of music in spiritual settings as he noted, "True prayer is the song, the movement of sound that releases the tensions of life. The lowanpi is used to promote harmony in life. Music helps to connect your reality back to the reality you were born with. I write about this in my book, Native American Healing (McGraw-Hill 2001)."

In today's society, Lakota people are not accustomed to being clustered or squeezed into crowded areas and Bad Hand commented on the effect of this kind of arrangement. He said, "A lot of our connection was made as a necessity of living so far apart. We see the world as our home and that is minimized by the idea of cluster housing as it overlooked the tiospaye. Cluster housing created competition for material gain. The Lakota culture teaches us that honoring each other was good and competition was not."

Bad Hand is also convinced that in a contemporary sense, the most successful Lakota people are those who have held on to their language and culture as a kind of self-affirmation. He said, "There is success when you bring beautiful things together and true peace is where everything unites."

When speaking on the issue of language loss, he said, "I have no fear that we will lose the language, because many more will learn it. If you panic about trying to preserve it, then you create a fear of its loss. Lakota is only meaningful in the context in which it is being spoken. For example, Tunkasila can mean grandfather, the president, or the spirits to which we pray. The beauty is you can describe with it. It creates possibilities instead of being restrictive."

Bad Hand now works with others world wide in spiritual development. He enjoys a certain independence in his work as wife, Terrie, works with land based cultures to create economic development co-directing the Taos County Economic Development Corp. in Taos, NM. He and his singing group, "Heart Beat" were originally known as the "Red Leaf Takoja" singers, however he has been away from Rosebud so long and with the original Red Leaf drum group carrying its own identity, the decision was made to give the name back to the community in 1991. .

Finally, Bad Hand formed High Star Productions through which he has produced a DVD and several collections of the music for which he is known internationally. The group's DVD entitled "Red Leaf Takoja: Songs of the Heartbeat" features the voice of Wes Studi and Bad Hand. Much of the music also features the work of the original Red Leaf singers. The collection may be accessed at www.highstarproductions.com.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna:

Hello I missed you at Pine Ridge when you came I didn't get a chance to come see you. But my question is I stop talking with my mother about 3 years ago and it was a big fight. She tried to take my kids my from me and I just up and left and married and nice man. I am happy my kids are happy, my mother has all of my belongings and will not give them back. Everyone in Pine Ridge that knows her says she needs to grow up as a grandma she should just give back most of my things. I have stayed with my mother for 7 years never dated or anything when I lived with her but after I moved on she just hates me and my husband she tried to get him fired but that didn't' work. Will she ever change? My other question is I have been buying the lottery tickets will we ever win the lottery.

Daughter of a Mad Mom

Dear Daughter:

I am sorry that your mother's embittered attitude has made her shut out love from her heart. Ideally, she would understand that your life is about you - not about her, and that you have the right to pursue your own life. She feels that if you really loved her you would not have "run off" with this man. My words are to mothers everywhere: Your children are not your property. They are independent beings, who have a right to their own lives. You cannot save them from their life experiences, broken hearts, and good or bad decisions. You cannot change your mother, but let it be a reminder to you as a mother not to contract your children into subordination of their will to fulfill your own will. As a daughter you can pray for your mother, you can send her a card now and then, and you can let go of your "stuff." By holding onto the idea that you can retrieve your things from her you are simply playing a losing hand. It just engages you in further conflict. Let it go, let it all go - and the Creator will provide you with what you need to replace it. On the lottery, well, somebody always wins, but they have to buy tickets to win, and they have to believe they will win to win. Winners of the lottery always have "a feeling" just before they win. There is no guarantee for you that you will win, but there also is no guarantee that you won't win. I don't see a big load of money coming in this year however, but I would not discourage you from your efforts. Winning comes in streaks. When you start a winning streak then buy lottery tickets. When you are losing, keep your money safe by not playing. You could win a significant amount of money in 2010.

Dear, Anna Bee

Hello,
I was wondering if you can help me out with this one: I was kinda clueless about this one because I was a little intoxicated (drunk).. at the time nothing bad but, the night that I was drinking with some girls I know they told me that I got too drunk and started to get mad bout something and that I left. Well when I left I took my three new Cd's, and my cell phone. When I woke up the next morning I woke up with out my Cd's, cell phone, and I even lost my shoes... well I tried to remember what all did that night but I can't. The last thing I remember was falling on the road and sitting under some trees... and if you can tell me where these things are I sure appreciate it, because I owe although on my cell phone bill and try to pay for it and use it again or at least trade it for a new one and i also need a good laugh...Thanks:

Drunk and lost her things...

Dear Lost:

Not too drunk? Change your definition of what that might be. I took a poll and everybody agrees you were too drunk. I see your Cd's in a pick-up truck on the seat...I believe the truck is a shade of red. I see your cell-phone tossed out of the window when it rang, by the person who owns (drives) the truck, and your shoes are located in a ditch not too far from the tree.

Take some good advice. Please, don't drink more than one ever - and I mean ever. The next time you ":lose" consciousness when you are awake, you may not wake up at all. You were at risk for rape or if it is possible, worse. You fight over nothing and are unpleasant and not fun to be around. Why would you want that for yourself? Take control. A phone, Cd's and shoes are nothing in comparison to your life. Blessings to you.

Hello Anna,

I have a question for you. Right now I'm going through a tough time financially and emotionally. I am at a young age, but I have these problems that I just don't think I can handle, if you know what I'm talking about. It's like never ending bad luck with me, it just goes from one thing to the next. It's starting to really stress me out. I'm trying to go through these days with a smile but sometimes it's too hard because I remember all the troubles I'm having. To make it worse I turn to alcohol to get away from these stresses. My question is, will my bad luck ever take a turn to good? Do you see anything positive for me?

Thanks Sincerely Stressin'

Dear Stressin':

I do see a time when things get better. Simply put however, you have to take charge of your life in order to have a better one. Sitting and waiting for "him" to correct the situation, or your parents to help, or even the system to help will not relieve your stress. Take charge of what you want to do. Visualize it, see it, feel it, create it and get going towards it. Waiting and putting up with people that do not see you as successful will not help you. Luck, by the way, comes from within. Good or bad, it is a reflection of your basic belief about what you feel you deserve. Programming from the world will generally train you to think less of yourself than is a true reflection of your right as a human being to be the reflection of the Creator or God that you represent on earth. Remember, we are all created in the image of God, and that is not the physical image, but the spiritual image. In that image there is free will and the power to create your own life. There is also the greatest power in that image of love. Create your life as an honoring of the God that created yours and your luck will change. Learn to love, not only your own life, which is a gift, but the lives of others. Respect the life force in all and you will find the Creator opening all doors for you. Power and luck are internal, not external.

Good Luck...from not until forever.

OLC receives $200,000 in Johnson Scholarship funds

KYLE - Oglala Lakota College has entered into an agreement with the Johnson Scholarship Foundation for the establishment of an endowment fund that will support student scholarships and a business center.

The Johnson Scholarship Foundation will provide $200,000 annually for four years as long as OLC matches this amount with $300,000. The first payment of $200,000 from the Johnson Scholarship Foundation has been received by OLC when the college met the $300,000 matching amount. There is now $500,000 in the Johnson Scholarship Foundation account.

No interest distribution will be made from this account until a goal of $2,000,000 is met. Beginning in the 2009/2010 academic year, OLC will disburse $50,000 in JSF scholarships and a minimum of $100,000 to fund business and entrepreneurship student scholarship and a business center.

OLC will continue to receive scholarship support from the Johnson Scholarship Foundation until the $2 million goal is met, and then it is OLC's responsibility to support student scholarships.

OLC has also received a $20,000 matching grant from the South Dakota Community Foundation when OLC raised $80,000 for the Calving Jumping Bull Scholarship. The funds raised for the Calving Jumping Bull Scholarship will remain in the investment portfolio of the South Dakota Community Foundation, and OLC will receive $5,000 annually for the distribution to its students.

STURGIS - As the drums began to sound, students of the Lakota, Nakota and Dakota Nations exited their bus to witness what could be described as powerful, members of several tribes joined in prayer to bless the day. Representatives from Montana and South Dakota tribes took part in a most impressive and moving event at the base of Bear Butte adjacent to the city of Sturgis, host to the biggest annual Harley Davidson bike rally in the world.

Rumors roll across reservation on deaths of Hard Heart and Black Elk

Twiss submits not guilty plea on Poor Bear homicide

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

PINE RIDGE - "The rumors probably started on Tuesday evening, April 4 in Whiteclay when Sheridan County officers removed a man from the street and sent him to Scottsbluff for psychological evaluation," said Martin Hansford, supervisory special agent with the Bureau of Indian Affairs criminal investigation division.

"We started getting calls about someone who was picked up who had either admitted to killing the two men or who had witnessed the event and had finally come forward," he said.

Rumors spread fast around Pine Ridge Reservation about the two murders that continue to confound law enforcement authorities both on and off the reservation. The bodies of Ron Hard Heart and Wilson Black Elk were found along the side of the road between Pine Ridge and Whiteclay in early June of 2000.

"We had all kinds of calls wanting to know about the potential break in the murder cases," said Melanie Janis Zimiga, station manager of KILI Radio, "for a while the phone was ringing off the hook but we had not information, there definitely is a loot of interest in this case, it seems people really want something resolved on this case no matter how long it has

The impact of Johnson O'Malley cuts in Lakota country

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - President Bush's fiscal year 2007 budget effectively zeroes out the Johnson O'Malley program, which provided 2006 funding levels at $16.4 million for the program. Senator Tim Johnson and several colleagues recently sent a letter to the Senate Appropriations Committee on Interior pointing out that now is not the time to cut JOM or other successful Indian education programs, especially those which target grade school children.

At a time when tribal communities are experiencing some degree of self-determination, it is crucial that the program be restored. Such restoration of grant funding is not unheard of as we saw in South Dakota how the state's congressional delegation worked together to ensure that Ellsworth Airbase was not on the final closure list.

The JOM grant program provides complementary funding for a number of ways as identified by a particular school and its parent committee. Approximately, half million Native American children attend the nation's public schools and JOM funding has been around since 1936 for schools which have demonstrated a commitment to improve.

Chad Blotsky, business manager at the Todd County School District is optimistic that JOM funding will not be cut at the final passage of the 2007 federal budget. He said, "JOM funds various programs that will need to be picked up. I don't foresee it being cut. The budget should be approved in December."

Blotsky noted that the state's congressional delegation is working hard to restore JOM funding. At the TCSD, Johnson O'Malley funds represent about one half of one percent of their annual operating budget of $26 million or $126,000.00. He also said that the funds spent at each school are "school specific" and each of the eleven schools utilizes the funding for a variety of different initiatives.

As an example of how JOM funds are earmarked at eleven Todd County Schools, several schools use the funds for prevention and wellness activities and incentives. Other schools use the funds for supplies and materials for Native American studies, parental involvement and student attendance.

Each school receives a modest amount depending upon the number of Native students enrolled. At a couple of the outlying schools where a smaller number of Lakota students are enrolled the schools receive less than $200.00 each, while one other receives less than a thousand dollars.

The high school receives over $15,000.00 given the high percentage of Lakota students served.

Johnson and colleagues noted that between 1990 and 2000, the percentage of Native people over 25 who had graduated from high school increased from 66 percent to 71 percent. That figure is still lower than non-Native students 25 and older who have graduated at a rate of 85 percent.

Johnson along with his colleagues concluded by writing, "We strongly believe the success of Indian students in public grade schools each year is a tribute to the success of the JOM grant program. An education that works makes all the difference in a child's life… The Johnson O'Malley program grant program works and is valued by public schools in states across the country."

"Senator Thune agrees with Senator Johnson that funding should be restored to the Johnson O'Malley Program. Similarly, Senator Thune supports core funding for tribal colleges at $67.4 million and level funding for Urban Indian Health Programs at $33 million. Senator Thune also supports a $99 million increase above the $67 million authorized for the COPS Meth Hot Spots program, which will help South Dakota's Native American communities fight the scourge of methamphetamine."

"As part of Senator Thune's efforts to help tribal law enforcement overcome the challenges they face, he successfully fought to secure $1.45 million for COPS funding for Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. Senator Thune recently sent a letter to the Department of Interior requesting the BIA to return a favorable recommendation for the Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe's application for a $1 million grant to fund an access road to the emergency water intake being built on the Oahe Reservoir.

Senator Thune has worked hard to find funding for the emergency water intake, which will deliver a clean drinking water supply to the Cheyenne River reservation. Senator Thune will continue to fight for the resources needed in Indian Country," said Kyle Downey.

"I know that this investment by the Johnson Scholarship Foundation will lead to greater entrepreneurial accomplishments on our reservation. This financial support leads to greater self-determination for our people on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation," stated OLC President, Thomas Shortbull. "With the matching grants from the Johnson Scholarship Foundation and the South Dakota Community Foundation, OLC is making progress on meeting its goal of raising $6 million in student scholarships by 2011," continued President Shortbull.

At the present time, the Federal Bureau of Investigation is the lead agency on this case and the BIA CID got involved only after the tribe turned the criminal investigation division back to the Bureau, according to Hansford.

"We have been going over the dame information over and over for several years," said Hansford, "we have not had any new information for years - I have to believe that there are people out there who witnessed the crime or have information about what happened but they are not coming forward, for whatever reason."

The FBI has had a cold case specialist come in and review the evidence and the case and have not seen any results as of yet.

"This is a major deal, two lives were taken, and two families were deprived of a loved one and yet no one will come forward," said Hansford, "we need the one or two or three people who were there to come forward and help us solve this case, this is not a game but something that has impacted the entire community."

Twiss enters not guilty plea to involuntary manslaughter charge in Poor Bear death

RAPID CITY - Early in the morning on November 3rd, Shelly Poor Bear, a 24 year old single parent with four children, was found along side the road to Three Moccasin Park, just off the road between Pine Ridge Village and Whiteclay. On March 28th, U.S. attorney Steven K. Mullins announced that Jessica Twiss, a 26 year old Nebraska woman, was indicted by a federal grand jury for the involuntary manslaughter relating to the death of Poor Bear.

On March 28th, Twiss appeared before U.S. Magistrate Marshall Young and pled not guilty to the indictment. The maximum penalty upon conviction is six years imprisonment and or $250,000 fine, or both.

The investigation is being conducted by the FBI is being prosecuted by assistant U.S. attorney Robert Mandel, no trial date has been set as of yet.

Poor Bear's death was one of six deaths on Pine Ridge Reservation between November 3, 2005 and December 10, 2005 involving young people between the ages of 13 and 27.

Council tables new impeachment complaints and sets special session

MANDERSON - In the first day of a three day regular tribal council session at the Wounded Knee District school in Manderson, the council was immediately faced with four new impeachment complaints that according to ordinance must be dealt with before dealing with any new business.

"I've never seen clear water turn to wojapi as quickly as we saw today," said Will Peters, council representative from Pine Ridge Village who made a motion on Tuesday to hear all of the complaints and then decide whether to accept the complaints or not and schedule a hearing or not."

Medicine Root District brought another complaint on Juanita Scherich to remove her from her position as council representative from Medicine Root District. Garfield Steele brought a complaint against both Walt Big Crow and Paul Little.

After much discussion and a new tribal attorney's interpretation of the tribe's impeachment ordinance, 41-26, the council voted 8-6 with two not voting to table any action on the impeachment complaints until a special session council meeting could be scheduled to review the entire impeachment process including the out-dated ordinance 41-26.

During this administration, complaints have been filed against the tribal president and treasurer and several council representatives. Cecelia Fire Thunder, OST president, has gone through two hearings, including a 66 day suspension, while Walt Big Crow has dealt with two complaints and a hearing with a 33 day suspension. Following the suspension of both Fire Thunder and Big Crow, both complaints were dismissed.

Hundreds march for Bear Butte

River from across the prairie sang out in prayer on a beautiful morning at the base of sacred Mato Paha.

Vice-President of the Oglala Sioux Tribe Alex White Plume; Debra White Plume Coordinator of InterTribal Defenders of Paha Mato (Bear Butte); Arvol Looking Horse, Keeper of the Pipe; Carter Camp - long time supporter of American Indian Movement and coordinator of Monday's prayer service and march into Sturgis, Bruce Ellison - attorney and long time supporter of Indian rights, Robert Grey Eagle, tribal attorney for many years, OST Council Representatives - Garfield Steele, Lydia Bear Killer, Will Peters, Mary Poor Thunder and Walt Big Crow among many other indigenous tribal council representatives were in attendance for this historic gathering of nations.

As bus loads of students and others began to gather for the morning ceremony that was planned by many to protest the inevitable encroachment of Bear Butte, you could feel the power of the mountain and the people.

They came by one, two and three, by the busload, members from many tribes' and their children, tribal council representatives and medicine men. They were here to protest and hopefully, protect a mountain that most European/Caucasian members of this state don't acknowledge as a site sacred to over 60 Indigenous nations.

The ceremony on the mountain was very much advertised as a 'Call to Action,' within the Indian Nation to bring notice to what is happening at significant locations, including sacred, burial, fossil, ceremonial, mineral and historical sites on treaty and tribal lands which hold significant importance to all tribal members.

The participants proceeded from Bear Butte in a caravan of over 200 vehicles that stretched from Bear Butte into the city of Sturgis.

History on Bear Butte: Phoenix, Arizona entrepreneur Jay Allen, who currently owns the "Broken Spoke Saloon" in Sturgis in addition to biker bars nation wide has filed for a malt liquor license for a 600 plus acre entertainment venue that includes asphalt parking for not only motorcycles and vehicles but for semi tractor-trailers as well. His endeavor also includes a 30,000 seat amphitheater for concerts, campground and an open and 'unpoliced environment', where he's placed an advertisement in Hustler magazine promoting, "Cold beer and hot, hot women."

These ads and other comments made by Mr. Allen brought to question his own personal character and the potential location of his proposed biker bar. These were the only determining factors on whether or not the Meade County commissioners could or more importantly should issue yet another liquor license in a county literally flooded with liquor establishments.

This follows on the heals of a recent Meade County initiative to build a shooting range in the same vicinity of Jay Allen's Sturgis County Line biker bar. That initiative was abandoned after one of the original organizations in defense of Bear Butte, the Defenders of the Black Hills, stopped development and in turn caused the county of Meade to return questionable funding back to Governor William "Bill" Janklow of South Dakota.

In talking with several Sturgis residents, they believed in what the marchers were doing and a few went further to say that they were also 'deeply' concerned with the continuous development not only within the city limits, but out east towards and around the Butte. Plans are in place for an additional 30,000 seat amphitheater at the Glencoe Campground not five miles from the mountain's base.

Marchers were allowed to enter Sturgis after being diverted from Lazelle St. to avoid public interaction, according to what this reporter heard on the county/state radio transmissions.

Police in the area were understandably nervous as the procession entered the city limits. One area resident that I questioned said that the police told him to take down a flag he had in his yard, because they thought it would antagonize the marchers. It was a biker flag, which held no significance to me, as a native.

Once in the city limits, the progression paused at the city park where they regrouped then proceeded into the township of Sturgis, where there were many curious and adamant supporters.

Asked how they felt about the protestors, ten out of ten said they were in support of the marchers, but would not officially go on the record, saying that they lived in Sturgis and didn't want to _ _ _ _ any one off. "I have to live and work here," was the general mood of the day.

Police and county personnel were very helpful and accommodating, leaving the press pool to ponder what's coming next.

Marchers gathered at the Sturgis Community Center for a meal and re-grouped to march to the Court house where the hearing to establish whether or not Jay Allen could obtain a license for the "World's Largest Biker Bar." A beer license that would essentially put a biker bar at the door of one of North America's holiest of sacred sites.

"What's ultimately at stake here is the issue of religious practice and individual rights that are not only humanly, but legally entitled to us as indigenous people. We are asking for the respect the U.S. gives to any school, church or hospital in these United States.," Deb White Plume stated in many press released to the local and national media outlets.

Opponents marched from the Sturgis Community Center to the Meade County Courthouse in strong alliance. Many in attendance were emotionally moved by what transpired on this day. Many said they would lay down their lives over the fate of the Mountain, the Black Hills and for restitution of the gold taken from Home Stake Goldmine.

Vietnam veterans, veterans of Wounded Knee 1973, our children, elderly, OST Council Representatives and other protestors were moved to tears, anger and frustration. Tensions ran high and the public safety officials were getting scared, but the people were overtly courteous.

Garfield Steele, Pine Ridge Reservation Councilman - Wounded Knee District, responding to the commission's action of 5-0 to approve the liquor license stated that "The Oglalas will lead the fight to protect Bear Butte. I've been saying all along that this is the real fight, we should be dealing with these issues instead of fighting each other in the Council Circle. Personally, I will lead the fight and give my blood, my life on the Mountain. This is what it's all about. Our land, our rights, I get real mad when I see the women and babies crying. This is just the start. I'll be back in July."

Alex White Plume with an unsteady voice told the people in attendance still over 250 strong, that this was not the end but just the beginning of the battle. "We came to them in peace, to their court. We got no justice. Now we'll go all the way. We are not only fighting for Bear Butte but for our Black Hills, our gold, our land."

Many federally recognized tribes and Lakota Oyate were moved to express not only their own personal intentions, but the intentions of their collective goal which is to stay off the mountain.

Plans for further protests are gaining momentum and another 'Call for Action,' goes out to all members of native nations and friends to converge on Bear Butte on July, 4 through the end of the Sturgis Bike Rally in the first week of August.

Reservation ball teams hit the road for second season action

Little Wound boys, girls win Denver's All West

BY TOM CRASH
Times Correspondent

DENVER/VERMILLION/RAPID CITY - Yes, the Big Foot Conference is over and the high school regular season and state tournaments are all in the book but girl's and boy's teams hit the road for the second season with a vengeance.

This past weekend as teams from Pine Ridge and Rosebud reservations traveled to Denver for the 18th annual All West high school tournament, to Vermillion and the Dakota Dome for the annual Willie Mac tournaments and to Rapid City for a set of YMCA competitions at gymnasiums around town..

The Little Wound boys and girls high school teams are not resting on their laurels, both traveled to Denver and came back with the championship banner and undefeated records for their efforts. All West included 29 boy's teams and 19 girl's teams.

Brice Hornbeck led the way with 20 points as Little Wound downed the Sicangu Akicita All Stars from Rosebud in the high school championship game 70-50. Up 34-26 at the half, Hornbeck, the tournament MVP, was helped by TJ McCauley's 12 points and Michael Apple's 11 in the win, McCauley earned an all star selection and Apple was named Mr. Hustle.

"We got through pool play and headed for the tournament," said Billy Hornbeck, Little Wound's coach, "I told the team, now we have to really play ball and the tournament ended up being easier than the pool."

Little Wound roared through pool play with wins over Northern Arapaho 56-52, Omaha Nation 50-41, Sicangu All Stars 70-51 and the Finest 58-50.

In the quarter finals in the first game of the single elimination tournament, it was Little Wound 72-47 over Eastern Shoshone and in the semis, 63-50 over The Love of the Game. Rich Big Boy, Willis Zephier, Casey Montileaux, David Giago, Dustin Shangreaux, Shilo Pierce and Ty Lunderman rounded out the Mustangs team.

Sicangu included Colton Douville, Chamberlain, Travis Spotted Horse and Taylor Brushbreaker, St. Francis and Todd County's Gunner Krogman, Ray Long, Mark DuBray and Vernie White Hawk.

"Our championship game went down to the wire," said Dana Brave Eagle, Little Wound coach, "more than once I thought it was over and we had lost, but the girls kept finding a way to come back and finally win it."

Up at the half, Little Wound found itself down by six with a minute and a half to go, Janessa Burke hit a three and after a stop, Jade Davis hit another three to tie it up 51 all with 30 seconds left in regulation.

After stealing the inbounds pass, the Lady Mustangs called time with six seconds left.

They went into the post to get the win but Rae Bean missed the shot, TyAnn Pourier grabbed the rebound and was fouled on the put back with half a second on the clock.

After missing the first free throw, Pourier hit the second and Little Wound owned a 52-51 win over the Apsaalooke Jammers for the championship.

Little Wound opened pool play with a 68-28 win over Lower Brule and followed it up with wins over the Jammers 50-47, 60-40 over Omaha Nation and 50-38 over Ft. Berthold. In the quarters, Little Wound downed Comanche Nation 47-41 and in the semis got by the Basketball Divas(Pine Ridge) 46-41.

Fire destroys courthouse

McINTOSH (AP) - The Corson County courthouse was destroyed by fire early Monday.

Crews reported heavy smoke coming from the two-story wooden building when they arrived shortly after midnight Sunday.

The courthouse is located in McIntosh near the North Dakota border on the Standing Rock Indian Reservation.

`A family that lives across the street smelled smoke, and they called in the fire department,'' said McIntosh Mayor Edward Block. ``They got up to check and they saw smoke coming out of the courthouse - up on the roof and all over. The cement vaults are standing, that's all. The building is completely down, there's nothing left.''

Fire units from Isabel, McLaughlin, McIntosh and Morristown responded.

The cause of the fire was undetermined.

Block said decisions about a temporary courthouse likely will be made by the end of the week.

Chadron Native American Center offers a variety of health services

CHADRON - The Chadron Native American Center, which has been in existence for six years now is partnered with Western Community Health Resources and offers Native Americans a virtual banquet of services.

They promote good health and wellness by offering various health screenings, which can tell people if they are healthy, at risk or in the worst case, in the midst of a health crisis.

They offer free cholesterol screenings that according to the Director, Joe Siebell, are very accurate and quick to administer.

The test measures total cholesterol, HDL, LDL, blood glucose and triglycerides.

Tama Dierks, LPN Case Manager who's been at the center for three years said, "We do combined services. We test for HIV, administer cardiovascular screenings and assist in diabetic awareness/prevention. We can also refer patients out who may need medical care, we obtain services for them, we help with nutritional issues and in getting their medications, we also help relay important medical information.

"We have community organizers in each community, that's through the Native Center here in Chadron. We are involved in administering Sons and Daughters of Tradition Curriculum, which is a Native American based curriculum, and it's being taught right now in a pilot program at the Gordon/Rushville Middle School," according to Michael White Mountain, Grants Manager at the Center. "We also have youth groups that are active right now in each Scottsbluff, Dawes, Box Butte and Sheridan counties. Two of those counties have a large number of Lakota residents. These are border towns like Rushville, Gordon, Chadron and Alliance.

We have four locations within those counties.

According to data released by the Native American Center based in Chadron, NE, there have been many reports that show increasing numbers in the Native American population with Diabetes and cardiovascular disease.

They provide resources and education on cardio vascular disease, diabetes, family planning, WIC and HIV/AIDS. They also offer fresh fruit and vegetable vouchers to every screening participant to further aid in nutritional endeavors while participants wait for the results of their testing.

Remember to fast 12 hrs before screening, to get accurate results.

You can reach the Chadron, NE office at 308-432-2174, Rushville at 308-327-2871, Gordon at 308-282-2611 and in Alliance at 308-762-3696.

Patrick Lee: tribal law must be checked on abortion clinic issue

BY PATRICK LEE

Patrick Lee is an instructor at Oglala Lakota College and is an expertise in tribal law. He is the former chief judge of the Oglala Sioux Tribe Court.

After reading Bill Harlan's article in the Rapid City Journal last week on the plan for an abortion clinic on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, the involvement of national Planned Parenthood, countries throughout the world and a WorldNetDaily.com headline proclaiming, "Sioux tribe plans to scalp its own," I feel obliged to share some information as food for thought.

Regardless of which side of the abortion issue one is on, there are some factual matters that must be considered.

Oglala Sioux Tribal President Cecelia Fire Thunder is proposing a reservation-based abortion clinic should South Dakota's HB1215 anti-abortion law become effective. Cecelia correctly states that tribal sovereignty would make the reservation exempt from state law banning most abortions, at least directly. In her latest press release she states that she has consulted attorneys about the clinic and that she is embarking on a fund-raising campaign.

I wonder if the consulting attorneys took time to research tribal law on the subject. The tribe's Juvenile Code describes unborn children as "a child conceived, but not born, is to be deemed an existing person so far as may be necessary for its interests and welfare to be protected in the event of its subsequent birth" (Chapter 5, Juvenile Code, Section 1.05). That definition and its implications could present a problem to supporters of the proposed abortion clinic.

But that's not all.

While the tribe is immune from the application of state law directly, there is a federal law which makes state criminal prohibitions applicable to Indian reservations.

The federal Assimilative Crimes Act incorporates the substantive law of state prohibitory laws and applies them to the reservation as federal laws. The ACA is rarely used these days, but the statute is still in the books and could conceivably subject reservation abortionists to federal prosecution for violating the substantive law of the state. State jurisdiction is not involved.

Another problem Cecelia would face as tribal president is her special oath of office. President Fire Thunder was sworn into office upon being elected and took an oath to uphold the laws of the Oglala Sioux Tribe. Tribal law as it presently exists would protect the unborn child because it is deemed an existing person and a reservation-based abortion clinic could be a violation of the child's right to protection.

Aborting, or terminating the life of an existing person would violate tribal law. A tribal official who fails to uphold the oath of office could face impeachment charges. Tribal law would apply personally to Cecelia whether or not she was president. Impeachment would be the least of Cecelia's problems if faced with a murder charge.

Cecelia could propose changing the tribal law as it defines unborn children. That would take some doing because, as she correctly states, the tribe views children as sacred. The cultural value of children being sacred is reflected in the laws of the tribe and any change would have to be made by the Tribal Council on behalf of the members of the tribe.

Tribal tradition views all life as sacred - two-legged, four-legged, crawling, plant life, etc. These cultural values would present a problem to one who would expose unborn children to abortion.

Tribal law views women, children and men as being sacred and in need of protection from the time of their conception through each cycle of life and throughout their elderly years.

I offer this information to point out that the creation of an abortion clinic on the Pine Ridge Reservation is not that simple, and that one aspect of tribal sovereignty does not resolve all issues facing the proposed abortion clinic.

The opinions expressed in Letters to the Editor and Opinion Pages are not necessarily that of the editor or staff of the Lakota Country Times.

Makosica basketball team remembered

Dear Editor:

In the mid 1940s, independent basketball was big and well attended in the Kyle area. This was mainly due to the fact that there was hardly any entertainment going on.

There were only two high school teams in action, also because of the lack of transportation to these games in the Pine Ridge area.

I guess I would call this the wagon and horseback days. Only the government workers had cars.

Because Kyle had a new larger gymnasium this was where the big tournaments were held. It was in 1946 our Makosica team pulled off a huge win.

There was a young man from the Rockyford area that put together a top notch hand picked basketball team. This guy's name was Hulligan. His team was spiked to the gills.

These boys and their leader were arrogant. They challenged our local tournament committee to a winner take all $1,000 purse. There were two days of basketball and people drove their teams, rode horseback and walked to see the who would be the Pine Ridge reservation's best.

Hulligan's tam has no problem at all illuminating the not so talented teams until they met up with the local Makosica team.

This team leader was Paul Apple and the player at the center position was Floyd Fire Thunder. The forward positions were Bert Cottier and Tony Apple. The guards were Chester Janis and Kenneth Apple. The extras were Garfield Iron Crow and Pershing Lays Hard.

These teams squared off and it was a pretty evenly match competition. My dad was sitting with an old time friend from Cuny Table by the name of Wilson Cuny. He was so proud of his sons Whiteman and Willard. He told my dad, keep your eyes on these two boys, they are going to show these local boys a thing or two about ball handling.

The gym was packed to capacity and some men stood on their saddles and watched through the large windows. The cheering was so loud, it almost raised the roof. Then in the fourth quarter, the Makosica team slowly pulled away from the spike up team. This was when my dad told Mr. Cuny to watch the two Apple boys. After pulling away with a comfortable lead, Chet as he was known went into his sophisticated ball handling act. He was the Lakota's answer to Marcus Haines. They double and triple teamed him to no avail.

One elderly lady hollered, why don't he give it to them if they want it so bad. I don't remember the other members of the Hulligan's team.

I might add that Chet, Kenneth and Tony were top notch saddle bronc riders at that time. Chet was the only cowboy that successfully rode the famous bucking horse Star Light.

Chet rode with the big boys, the likes of Bill Linderman and Casey Tibbs. Kenneth and Tony dominated the cowboy classic on the local scene.

Good news deserves credit

By Dr. Archie B. Beauvais

That is a slogan that former RST president Charles Colombe allowed me to borrow on a loan basis. An organization that he is working with in Albuquerque, NM on an in-kind basis created it as a kind of vision statement for their work and Charlie thought it certainly applied to the kind of stories that I like to highlight in my writing.

There is a wealth of information and events that impact Lakota people everyday. What is interesting is that news changes by the hour and what was news yesterday may not be as informative today.

I have been receiving comments about an interview I did on KINI with Richard Iyotte and people are saying that they like positive news. I try to write what I label "feel good" news, but of course in the news industry it does not always sell.

I know for a fact, however, that there are topics and issues, which we need to inform the public about either through our writing or through advertisements sponsored by a respective institution.

As a matter of fact, we have a responsibility to transmit such information particularly if it has some bearing on the public health of the people.

In the ensuing weeks and months, I am hoping that the tribes and the Indian Health Service will begin to inform our tribal membership about the potential effects of the bird flu or avian flu if it ever does materialize on our shores. We don't want to misinform the people about this flu or alarm them needlessly, but it something that we need to present the facts on and how people can prepare themselves.

Also, this is the month of the child and agencies that want to promote their mission and objectives may wish to step forward and inform the public as to their functions and what they have accomplished this past year.

I realize that advertising is such an important function in letting the public know what our activities are and what issues we might be facing. I would imagine that most agencies have a certain advertising budget factored into their yearly budget. We see weekly special advertised by grocery stores and department stores all the time and it is a great way to hammer away at the kinds of thing we can offer the public.

If I could afford to advertise I would tell prospective employers about my wonderful endearing qualifications and why I should be leading my own university or what one may expect when I start on my new book.

I have not started it, yet, but being a procrastinator it is something that I want to do. I'm simply waiting for inspiration so watch for my book when inspiration strikes.

When we cover functions, events and ceremonies as sponsored by the Lakota community there is a difference in the way a story might come across to our readership.

You might read the same story that we do in one of the mainstream or community newspapers and I swear it sounds like totally different accounts.

What we have to offer is the fact that we are grounded in cultural sensitivity, protocol and the Lakota language and this fact is clearly evident. I think our Lakota readership knows that fact and we hope to continue to serve them with information that targets their background and cultural uniqueness.

'Good news deserves credit' indeed, is a catchy slogan as it underscores the need to be mindful of the good works that many Lakota people do everyday. There are many that do not want to be in the spotlight and we have to honor their wishes also.

Concerned about oyate

Dear Editor:

Hau! I am writing in concern of not only my well being or my own oyate, but for everyone who may have the same concern.

I am concerned over the fact of all tribes being cut off all funds for our programs, nationwide.

Who will be standing up for our tribe?

Are we ready with our treaty rights?

Who are we going to trust with our future at stake?

Who will stand and answer all questions when the time comes?

Is it time to reconstruct or reorganize our management?

Is it time to cut down our group and appoint or just a stand up few?

Maybe a laughing matter now, well.

I am worried about all this, all the happenings in articles I read and I believe it's my right to read and write my concerns.

Thoughts that come from the heart

Making change in our lives

By Amanda Takes War Bonnett

EDITOR AND PUBLISHER
LAKOTA COUNTRY TIMES

In the past several years I have been going through some major changes in my life regarding healing, divorce, empty nest syndrome and basically changing my belief systems to accommodate the changes in my life.

It wasn't easy to make those changes, but I have been determined to make changes in my life because I simply wanted to be a happier person. It took taking the bull by horns and tackling one of the biggest issues that we have with human behavior and that is to change a belief system. I realized I had to change my belief system to become a better person for myself and those I love. That meant work for me as a person and it is easier said than done to make changes in one's life to be a better person.

Some time ago, I read a quote by Dalai Lami, "The Art of Happiness: A Handbook for Living" where he says. "I believe that the very purpose of our life is to seek happiness. That is clear. Whether one believes in religion or not, whether one believes in this religion or that religion, we are all seeking something better in life. So, I think, the very motion of our life is toward happiness." He further said happiness can be achieved through training the mind. In training the mind, he meant more in intellect and feeling, heart and mind. He says by bringing about a certain inner discipline, we can undergo a transformation of our attitude, our entire outlook and approach to living.

So in doing so, to achieve that inner discipline, we have to identify the things in our life that lead to happiness and the things in our life that lead to suffering. We work to eliminate the issues that lead to our suffering. And to do that it takes times, getting our resources how we can do that and really working at it.

The important issue is to eliminate the suffering or the pain and issues that hurt us in our lives. Sometimes that is hard to do and we eventually just wallow in our suffering and continue on, not making that effort to make change in our lives.

It's tough. We see it all over in our communities. We see with the alcoholism we have in our families, the depression, poverty, health issues and so many other issues. We just don't how to make change or we don't realize we have to make change to make changes in our life… to be a happy.

Happiness is one of the top human emotions and it can be achieved.. if we so desire it.

I grew up with the belief system of the all American dream of having a home, with a mommy and a daddy, the children and raising them to productive members of society. It wasn't long before I realized the partner I choose for life didn't have those same beliefs as me. I couldn't understand how he could easily emotionally detach from his children to an almost non existence status.

It took understanding alcoholism and depression and how those issues affected my family to let go of that suffering.

In the book "Beliefs" by Tim Hallbom an Suzi Smith , our beliefs make up much of what we are. If people really believe they can't do something, they're going to find an unconscious way to keep the change from occurring.

Just like in working with smoking, you have to get someone to consider what they will be in their life regarding their relationships, their work life and in recreation when they no longer smoke.

Once someone has set an outcome, they have already started the change. This means that once we are clear about our goals our brain will organize our unconscious behavior to achieve it and we will begin to keep on track to achieve our goals. But we have to know what we want and our desire to achieve it.

Once we know what we want and what we desire, we can determine what abilities and resources we need to achieve it.

Then of course there will be interferences, even subconsciously like really wanting to change in our lives but not knowing how to create a representation of that change or how we would want to behave if we did the change and giving ourselves a change to use we learn and that takes time.

There has been so many times that I have read the requests to our Ask Anna column. This has become a popular reading item in the paper and it is because women are seeking, and men of course, we have gotten a few from our Lakota men. They are seeking answers and most of the requests focus around change… how to handle change and how to find what they really want. It's hard work at times and one thing that I have always encountered is discipline. Developing discipline takes effort. It is something we need to make change in our lives.

It takes tiny baby steps to accomplish what we we want in our own lives and with our families and it takes work to figure out how we can achieve those steps.

Notes From Indian Country

Sovereignty can have its growing pains

By Tim Giago
(Nanwica Kciji)

© 2004 KNIGHT RIDDER TRIBUNE NEWS SERVICE

One of my recent columns on sovereignty in Indian country found its way on to the Crow Nation's tribal email system and prompted some encouraging, but realistic comments.

One commentary drew my immediate attention because since I had worked for the tribal government of the Oglala Sioux Tribe many years ago and having experienced first hand the obstacles often placed in the path of anyone trying to bring about much needed improvements, his sharp comments went directly to the heart of sovereignty.

Also, as the former editor and publisher of a newspaper based on an Indian reservation, one that covered the good, the bad and the ugly of tribal politics and social interplay, my association with tribal governments had a tendency to change every two years when a new administration took office.

My column was intended to point out the big picture on why tribal sovereignty is so important in Indian country. But there are many smaller factors that can create real problems. The man writing to me will remain anonymous because he does work for the Crow Nation and his job could be jeopardized for speaking his mind.

The first thing he pointed out is that some tribes can be "oppressive and dysfunctional." He talked about how tribal administrations change every four years, or on some reservations (Pine Ridge for example), every two years.

The downside of this is that whenever a new administration steps in most of the employees and directors of the major programs are replaced. This, of course, negates any continuity within the structure of the tribe. If there is not a continuous governmental structure the knowledge gained by those program directors about to be replaced is lost. The tendency then is to start all over again after each tribal election.

More often than not many employees are hired according to whom they are related to within the new government. "It's not what you know, but who you know," opens the door to employment. And because family ties are so important within the makeup of a tribe, those related to the tribal leaders often are first in line for the jobs. Many times these "relatives" have little or no experience at the job positions they are called upon to fill.

The tribal chairmen or chairwomen are king and queen. I will never forget a comment made to me many years ago by the newly elected chairman of the Oglala Sioux Tribe, Elijah Whirlwind Horse. I worked for Elijah as his Director of Public Relations. After his first week in office and after employee after employee came to his office with hats in hand hoping against all hope to keep their jobs, he said, "I never realized how much power the tribal chairman has; even the janitors are coming to me begging to keep their jobs."

The writer from Crow Nation continued, "People are fired and replaced indiscriminately based on the will of the chairman so no one feels stable in their jobs and they become concerned about whether they look good rather than whether they are doing a good job."

I hope the good people of the Crow Nation do not take this personally because I could be writing about any number of Indian nations across America. The problems brought up by this member of the Crow Nation could have been brought up by a member of the Cherokee, Blackfeet, Nez Perce, Oglala, Sicangu, Navajo, or by any member of the other 500 Indian nations in this country.

Any many reservations the people have a tendency to gossip and on a reservation where everybody knows everybody, that gossip can become quite vicious and hurtful. Those whose lives are stuck in place often direct the gossip at those making a success of their lives. And jealousy can be carried to extremes on many Indian reservations. As one writer said, "Jealous people will cut you down every chance they get."

Further disruption often occurs because some people that are powerfully politically connected do not believe that the rules and the laws are meant for them. They believe that because they are "connected," they are immune to the laws others must live by.

Others take total advantage of their connections by showing up for work only when they feel like it and they can often be found sitting at the slot machines in the tribe's casino during working hours.

These same people often secure funds to travel to conventions all over the country and spend the time shopping or sitting in the bars drinking rather then attending the daily sessions of the convention. Many years ago I wrote a column labeling these people as "HolidayInndians." Times haven't changed them that much except now, with more money to spend from the casino profits; they travel more often and extensively.

Under these conditions it is often difficult to expect tribal members that have gone out to get an education to return to this environment lacking in productivity and honesty. If one is used to coming to work on time and working the full eight hours, it can be very discouraging to see employees drawing the same wages or even higher wages sitting around doing nothing, coming to work whenever they please, and leaving work whenever they feel like it.

Change of habits has to happen from the top down in tribal government. As I have written so often over the years, it will take strong, intelligent, honest and able leaders to bring about a change in direction for so many tribes.

Attaining true sovereignty is not an impossible goal but until all of the faults listed above are addressed and corrected, it will never happen in my lifetime.

Is sovereignty cast in harm's way

Dear Editor:

I live far removed from the environs of Pine Ridge, South Dakota, in Chillicothe, Mo. For the last four years I have devoted all of my reading time studying native American history, particularly Lakota and Oglala Lakota literature and of the six other tribes of the Lakota nation.

I first want to apologize to the nation of the Lakota for the Holocaust of the 19th century which was conducted against the Lakota people.

I am sorry for the murdering of your men, women, and children. I am sorry for the butchering of your buffalo and destroying of your pony herds. I am sorry for a white culture which stole your lands and forced you to live on reservations where you are isolated and practically stripped of any meaningful resources with which to realize and acceptable standard of living.

For the last year we have subscribed to the Lakota Country Times. The newspaper has been a great source of knowledge for me in understanding some of the history of the Lakota people. Keep up the good work.

In Volume II, Issue 25, March 22-March 28, 2006, I see that the president Cecila Fire Thunder has announced that she will use the sovereignty issue as a vehicle to forward her belief that abortion should remain as a viable choice for women in the state of South Dakota.

One of the remaining jewels for the nation of the Lakota is their sovereignty, one of the remaining principles of government which sets the Lakota people apart and confers upon your nation a very special status.

Using that principle to promote the issue of abortion is dangerous, careless and harmful approach to further one's individual's beliefs. The interests of the tribal government, sovereignty, is cast in harm's way to further the interests of the president.

It suggests that the issue of abortion is much more important than preserving sovereignty for the Lakota nation.

There is enough division and conflict and challenge now with a tribal president and tribal council to keep the Pine Ridge reservation busy providing an effective government for the people of Pine Ridge.

I hope that the tribal president can find a more approach to the problems of abortion without compromising the interests of the Lakota people.

Putting a kink in the knot these nuts are trying to tie around women

Dear Editor:

Please relate to Cecilia Fire Thunder that millions of women from all across the country are yelling-hooray over Cecilia Fire Thunder's reaction to the South Dakota abortion laws.

It would be great if every state in the country had a Native American reaction like that- it would certainly put a kink in the knot these nuts are trying to tie around women everywhere.

Won't they throw a hissy fit when they realize that they have no jurisdiction over her actions! Thank her for all of us and our daughters, please.

Bear Butte rally march strong, we need you in August for biker rally, come ten fold strong

Ah-ho My Relations,

Many things have happened since I sent out the last update from the "Intertribal Coalition to Defend Bear Butte" but one thing has overshadowed everything else. Jay Allen HAS BEGUN CONSTRUCTION on the huge, 600 acre, "biker bar/concert venue" only a few hundred yards north of the Sacred Mountain!! We have posted some of the pictures on our web site www.defendbearbutte.org but I warn you they're ugly. He began the construction well before the county granted him the license to sell booze so both he and we knew how the vote would go.

Last week, more than a thousand Indian people gathered to pray on Bear Butte and march to the Meade County Courthouse to show the county just how serious a step they were taking when they vote to approve the liquor license for Jay Allen. We were led by Treaty Council Chiefs Oliver Red Cloud and Floyd Hand and many other traditional Chiefs and Headsmen. The Northern Cheyenne Tribal Council came to stand with us, as did Councilmembers from Pine Ridge, Rosebud, Cheyenne River and Lower Brule. A group of Akicita, Eagle Staff Carriers, were followed by a group of veterans in camo dress carrying the American Flag and the black MIA flag alongside the tribal flags. Walking in front of us all in pride and dignity was the 19th generation, "Keeper of the Sacred Pipe Bundle," Chief Arvol Looking Horse.

As is always the case as the morning dawned on Tuesday those of us who organized the protest wondered how many people would take time from their weekday schedule and travel from the reservation homelands to stand with us for the sacred mountain.

At first the parking lot held a few knots of people standing around talking and shaking hands greeting each other. Then as the ten o'clock starting time came closer more and more cars began to arrive and the lot began to fill. A school bus from Takini pulled in and the energy all around rose. Then up the road came our invited escort of bikers on their big Harleys who had ridden in from Denver. Veterans in their fatigues began to assemble and a speaker system was mounted on Tom Cook's flatbed truck and the drum placed in the middle. Six or eight young men jumped up on the truck to sing an opening prayer song before our honored Sicangu elder, Lorraine Iron Shell Walking Bull, an honored woman who has been steadfast in her work to defend Bear Butte, offered a prayer to the Mountain for all of us.

After the opening prayers I was called upon to explain the recent history of our struggle and how the gathering was organized. As I looked around I was struck by the singular honor that I was being given to speak at such a historic gathering of Indian people. Our people gathered in a large circle as the prayers began so I was able to look into the crowd and recognize strong traditional leaders and sundance chiefs like Rick Two Dogs, Wilmer Mesteth, Keith Horse Looking, Russell Eagle Bear and others. (I shouldn't have begun mentioning names because so many were there that my poor memory will fail to mention some notable people like Rocky Afraid of Hawk and his wife Pam who are founding members of the Coalition.)

I say these things to tell you how truly awe inspiring the gathering was to me as I stood facing Mato Paha and a thousand brave Indian people who were determined to save our mountain that day.

It's hard for me to describe the many inspiring talks were given in front of the mountain that morning. Organizers like Debra White Plume of our Coalition and Owe Aku, Anne White Hat of the BBIA and Sicangu Way of Life spoke for all of us who have spent the past year getting ready for this struggle. Alex White Plume, Vice Chair of the Oglala Lakota Nation spoke of his nations determination to defend the entire Black Hills and the Oglala's willingness to take a stand for Bear Butte. The Thunderhawk drum then sang a special strongheart song for Crazy Horse that Chief Floyd Hand requested before he told the people to stand strong no matter how hard it gets. He told us the entire Teton Nations Treaty Council was behind us and that if we stay together we can win. Then Chief Red Cloud spoke to us about how his Grandfather had fought for the Black Hills and drove the whiteman out of them. He said Mato Paha still belongs to our people and that we must fight for her in the name of our future generations. Then Chief Looking Horse came forward to offer a wonderful prayer to and for Bear Butte and all the red nations. With that the hearts of the people soared and we happily began to get into cars for the caravan to Sturgis.

The caravan was led from Bear Butte by our biker allies, followed by a van with our own security men and the flatbed truck with the drum and singers. Following them was a long caravan of cars, pickups, school bus and tribal Elders vans.

It was well over a hundred cars and from where I was we could barely hear the drum and singers as we slowly drove into Sturgis. Once in Sturgis we dismounted in the park to march the final eight or ten blocks into town. Now the truck with the drummers went first, then Chief Arvol striding alone in his Headress and Chief's shirt. Behind him were the Eagle Staff Carriers, including me with the Coalition Staff, behind us the veterans marched with the American, Tribal and MIA flags. Then a thousand beautiful people came, the young ones chanting "Save Bear Butte!" "Save Bear Butte!" all the way through town.

The route the local cops had planned out for us went down a small side street and only came on the main thoroughfare the final block or so. However my son Poj Camp was in charge of security and he had mapped out a different route:), at the right corner he turned the lead truck left so now the march was going past the Broken Spoke Saloon and turning right down the main drag! At first I could see every cop grab their mics and report what had happened, the lead cops were already going down the sidestreet alone while the Indians were marching right past the B.S.Saloon! Then we turned down the main street and spread out across the entire street instead of one way, I loved it as now we could then march where all of Sturgis had to see us.

As we reached our destination the drum began the AIM song and all the women sang in chorus, Chief Looking Horse began to dance and all the Staff Carriers and Flag carriers danced behind him to the steps of the community building where we were to gather. It was a powerful march and as we made our way into the building I could feel the energy and power of my people, all with one mind and united in purpose.

After a meal we once again assembled to march the final three blocks up the hill to the courtroom where the hearing would be held. The only difference in the march order was we were led by a Cheyenne River police car manned by two young Lakota policemen who were also sundancers and traditional men.

As we began the drums sang warrior songs for us and the women trilled their encouragement to be strong when facing an enemy. Once again Arvol led us up to the courthouse door and we gathered in a large circle around him, dancing with our staffs until the songs were finished then whooping in defiance to let the wasicu know we had arrived.

In a way the following hearing was a farce and at the same time a wonderful thing. It was a farce because the outcome was a foregone conclusion. It was wonderful because so many leaders of our people were able to tell the world, on the record, about our Sacred Mountain and what she means to our Nations.

Butte, her place in our beliefs and ceremonies and how the noisy, drunken biker bar would forever destroy the sanctity of the sacred places upon her. Tribe after Tribe, leader after leader gave testimony, we told them how bad the location was for a beer bar and just what the mountain meant to our various Nations. We told them of ten thousand years of peaceful worship that has taken place on Bear Butte and how the spirits and medicine on the mountain would be threatened by the noise and filth of Jay Allen's proposal. It was wonderful to hear.

On behalf of the bar a lawyer spoke briefly, a town racist spoke, a bar maid testified that Allen was a good boss and Allen testified that he respected Indians. Based on everything they had heard that day the Meade County Commissioners then voted unanimously to give Jay Allen a liquor license. Not one commissioner had ears.

Adding to this alarming development is the fact that the Meade County Commissioners have renewed all the liquor licenses for the other booze and concert venues surrounding Bear Butte. Plus the State legislature refused to even hear the bill introduced by Indian legislators to establish a buffer zone around Bear Butte.

Even though we expected these bad developments they are none the less disappointing and show us all that Indian people will not be heard in the normal channels of political discourse in South Dakota.

These actions only serve to make it even more vital that the people gather at the time of the "Sturgis Bike Rally" to show America that if they destroy this sacred place, they also destroy we Indians as a people. We must gather to show them that the destruction of our sacred mountain is an act of genocide against the indigenous people of this land just as the destruction of the buffalo was to our Grandparents.

We had one thousand Tuesday, this summer we need ten times that many, I hope you will be one of us.

Reader states his opinion on proposed abortion clinic

Dear Editor,

This letter to the editor is on behalf of all the unborn children affected by the passage of HB 1215 and Oglala Sioux Tribe President Fire Thunder's reaction to that law.

I was reading her remarks in the Rapid City Journal, Rapid City Weekly News, and the Lakota Country Times last week and she stated she wanted to build an abortion clinic on her land on the reservation.

I want to go on record as being opposed to her misguided ideology, because someone has to stand up and speak out for those who cannot speak for themselves.

Many innocent women and children who knew no wrong died here.

- Inscription on the mass grave marker at Wounded Knee, 1903.

The president should have this inscribed on the front of her proposed death center, but with the reference to women deleted, because they know they are doing wrong by walking through those doors to receive an abortion.

As our elected leader her voice is supposed to be the voice of the people, but she does not speak for me. Murder is murder no matter what you call it, and misusing the sovereignty issue is just wrong. If she wants to press that issue, she should have a nobler cause and not the killing of innocent children.

Where are all the people who spout that rhetoric, "Our Children are Sacred?" I see none of them protesting in front of the tribal building against this legalized murder.

We as a people must have no part in the shedding of innocent blood by murdering our unborn children. We have become just as bad as the whiteman, first it's infanticide, then next comes patricide and matricide all misguided as an unalienable right. When does it all end? Are the handicapped next?

On Sept. 11, 2001, Islamic terrorists killed 3000 innocent people who were peaceably trying to live their lives. On that same day, 4,000 innocent babies died from abortion in America. This, all at a time when there are lines of people, all waiting to adopt these innocents.Abortion doctors have murdered more 43 million real people (babies) since 1973. A great many of these infants had their fully developed skulls crushed by so-called "doctors." They crush their skulls and pull apart their little bodies, or poision them. These so-called doctors probably never mention to the mother that abortion is linked to premature births and breast cancer either.

Planned Parenthood operates the nation's largest chain (nearly 850 death centers) of abortion clinics and almost 80 percent of it's facilities are located in minority neighborhoods. About 13 percent of American women are black, yet they submit to over 35 percent of the abortions, and blacks seem blind to this. These quotes are from blackgenocide.com.

Doesn't that sound just like the illegal sterilization that was going on in our IHS Hospitals?

John Kerry argues that an unborn child is not a person, so this unborn baby is therefore not protected by law. Blacks should remember that the Supreme Court used this same basic flawed argument in 1857 during their "Dred Scott" decision. The outcome, was that this court declared that blacks simply weren't persons because they were inferior; so the law didn't protect them. We Native Americans didn't become "Persons" until 1924 with the passage of the Indian Citizenship Act.

In Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court erred again by denying a whole class of human beings (preborn babies) the most fundamental right - the right to life. Thanks to our understanding of the human genome and cloning technology, we can now state with scientific conviction that life begins at conception.

Now apply this understanding to current abortion policy. In 1973, Justice Harry Blackmun is quoted from Roe v. Wade as saying, "We need not resolve the difficult question of when life begins. When those trained in the respective disciplines of medicine, philosophy, theology are unable to arrive at any consensus, the judiciary, at this point in the development of man's knowledge, is not in a position to speculate."

Clearly, today that is no longer the case. We can say with scientific certainty when life begins. No more sugarcoated terms like "viability" and "preembryo" should be permitted. If a child's life has no value as compared to the mother, at least force proponents of abortion to say so. They should have the intellectual integrity to stand behind their "choice" to kill the child. Let's no longer allow them to hide behind the veil of ignorance and technical terminology. If they must kill, let them be branded as murderers and nothing less.

Todd County student collects fire fighting helmets for hobby

BY BAPTISTE 'BEAUX' BEAUVAIS
Special to the Times

MISSION - Ever since the tragic events at the World Trade Center, firefighters are the real 'heroes' because of the loss of life in their ranks. They are called the "The Bravest" for their actions. They now serve as heroes and role models for many and their equipment is something that the public is now collecting.

Fire fighters are taught to run into burning buildings, while the public runs out and this adds to their heroism.

A story of collecting of eight fire helmets as a childhood hobby is the subject of this personal story. They range from black, yellow to white and red. Six are structural and two are wildland. Structural fire helmets are used for fighting building or house fires. Wildland fire helmets are used for fighting forest or grass fires.

The manner in which they were acquired and a little bit of their history is needed.

The very first fire helmet I acquired was a red wildland fire helmet made in 1989 by Mine Safety Appliances. My uncle Edward One Star who is a crew boss for the Rosebud Fire Department was kind enough to donate an older used helmet to the collection. It was the very first fire helmet in the collection.

The second fire helmet was a black structural fire helmet made by Cairns of New Jersey. It is a Cairns model 660C Modern with a liner and chinstrap. The price is $252 if purchased in new condition. A firefighter from Kentucky who was visiting Rosebud at the time donated it to my collection.

Another fire helmet in the collection is also a white Cairns 660C Modern. It belonged to an assistant fire chief in Indiana. It costs the same as the black helmet with a face shield, a cushioned liner and lime green reflective decals. These helmets are called "Modern" because they have a smooth top unlike traditional fire helmets, which have "ribs".

Two other helmets that are in the collection are a white Cairns 770 Modern and a yellow Cairns 770 Modern. Both have face shields and fire-resistant neck shrouds. The yellow Cairns 770 was acquired from the Internet auction site eBay for a price of $22 back in 2004. The white Cairns 770 was purchased at a rummage sale for $15 and is in good usable shape.

A favorite fire helmet in the collection is a Cairns Traditional 880 Century. It has a neck shroud, chinstrap, and a brass helmet front holder that is a carved brass eagle. It also has a blue leather helmet front that is a replica of lieutenant shield from the movie, Ladder 49. The helmet cost $42 on eBay, which was purchased in early 2005.

Traditional fire helmets are different from other helmets because they have eight "ribs" which are lines that protrude about a centimeter from all around the helmet. On older leather helmets from the 1800s this is where the leather was sewn to keep the helmet together. Most traditional helmets today are made of fiberglass and have "ribs" to depict the "traditional" style helmets of the 1800s.

In December of last year, another wild land fire helmet was added to the collection. It is a red Bullard Wildfire helmet with a chinstrap. It has lime green reflective decals on both sides. If purchased new this helmet would cost $45. Wild land fire helmets are different from structural helmets because they look like construction helmets. They have a cap brim in the front unlike structural fire helmets.

Beaux Beauvais with his fire helmet collection.

The helmet acquired most recently is a white 1969 MSA structural fire helmet from Los Angeles County Fire Department in California. It has a gold reflective helmet front that is made of plastic. It reads, "L.A County Battalion Chief" A battalion chief in Los Angeles County used the helmet back in the 1970s. The helmet was won on eBay for $30 about a month ago. These helmets are rare and expensive because helmets like this one were used in the television series, "Emergency" which was produced from 1972 to 1978 about the L.A County Fire Department.

The continuing emphasis on the work of "The Bravest" is resulting in other collectibles, such as videos, clothing items and equipment. I plan to add other fire helmets that will be added to the collection in coming years. Also in my collection is various gas masks, and toy collection of fire trucks and models.

Prue honored for years of military service

Was in ambush that killed Dennis Morgan

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

ROSEBUD - Claude Prue of Okreek has retired from 24 years of military service spent in the National Guard and on active duty, most recently in Iraq.

He says he enjoys his work and his privacy and simply wants to lead a quiet life. The Sicangu Lakota from Okreek earned an associate of arts degree in criminal justice from the Human Services department at SGU and has been employed in the alcohol treatment field since 1990.

In Iraq Prue was in the same vehicle that was hit by an improvised explosive devise (IED) and which killed Dennis Morgan, also of the 153rd Battalion. He said, "On that, later we got hit. Everything was covered. We never suspected them to hit us all of a sudden. We didn't know their ability to make bombs." Prue said he was situated higher up in the vehicle and that fact probably saved his life. He said, "If it was higher up, I would have gotten hit. I stayed on top looking for the others as well as the enemy. I told them we needed to keep going."

Prue noted that he often changed roles in the vehicle in which he was riding. Sometimes he would drive, other times he might serve as the tank commander or serve as security inside all the time being vigilant of the enemy. In fact, during most of his career, Prue said he changed his military occupational specialty or MOS several times. At one time he worked in artillery and armor, and then switched to a medical unit as a cook specialist, and then he worked in engineering.

Prue joined the U.S. Army in the early 1980's and was stationed at Ft. Carson, CO. He was assigned to the 730th Medical Unit of Winner, which is now the 173rd Engineering Battalion.

On March 23, Sgt. Prue (Ret) formerly of the South Dakota National Guard was presented a plaque, which recognized his 24 years of service.

The plaque was presented by a former colleague, SSGT Mark Olsen of Company A, 153 Engineering Battalion.

Olsen said, "During Operation Iraqi Freedom Sergeant Prue was tasked with finding and disarming roadside bombs as a member of Alpha Company."

In his closing remarks, Olsen also said, "Sergeant Prue performed his job admirably and set an example for younger soldiers to follow. The South Dakota National Guard and this country thank Sergeant Prue for his service and a job well done."

Alpha Company of Winner and Wagner was charged with the responsibility of locating roadside bombs during five months in 2004.

The two platoons from Winner were in charge of specialized heavily armored vehicles specially manufactured for detecting, interrogating, and destroying buried roadside bombs.

Left: Staff Sergeant Mark Olsen
Right: Sergeant Claude Prue.

The bombs were usually buried along the shoulders of highways and gravel roads. The insurgents' objective was to try to try to blow the bombs up as the vehicles passed by. Prue said, "It was best they blew those bombs on us in our armored vehicles than to have them blown on soft skin vehicles like the humvee."

Prue said about the recognition, "It was kind of related to the other guys after 24 years.

I didn't make the award ceremony. It was nice. It was kind of like closing out a job. I looked at the service as a way to get an education. I was on active duty for three years."

Prue is content to reflect on the merits of a war that is debated by people on both sides of the issue.

However, he says that we need to continue to rebuild the country's infrastructure which we destroyed otherwise it would reflect on our nation.

Dakota Garnier arrested

RAPID CITY (AP) - One of two brothers at the center of an extradition dispute on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation pleaded not guilty to charges against him.

Rapid City police arrested Dakota Garnier last Friday at a doctor's clinic.

He's charged with attempted murder and aggravated assault for the beating of Matthew Pepin of Hot Springs.

A prosecutor said authorities had been waiting for Garnier to leave the reservation, where he fled after the beating.

An arrest warrant is still out for Garnier's brother, Dirk Garnier, who also is wanted in connection with the beating.

Powwow grounds near Fort Pierre ready for first season

PIERRE (AP) - A new powwow site north of Fort Pierre near the Oahe Dam is ready for its first full season of activities for American Indians.

Clarence Skye of the United Sioux Tribes said the first event will be in June.

Only a few small jobs are left to finish on the grounds, he said.

Several governmental agencies funded the $550,000 project.

A powwow will be held annually during the last week in July, and a seminar might be held on the grounds this summer, Skye said.

Two of 16 arrested in Pine Ridge drug bust want evidence barred

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - Two of 16 people accused of drug trafficking on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation want a judge to keep evidence out of trial on grounds it was taken illegally.

Geraldine Blue Bird pleaded not guilty last week in federal court in Rapid City to drug and firearms charges.

She was arrested Dec. 21 with three others at a Ramada Inn in Rapid City after someone smelled marijuana smoke coming from their room. A federal agent said officers found about 1 1/2 pounds of cocaine, guns, ammunition, $16,519 in cash and drug paraphernalia with them.

In her motion to suppress evidence, Blue Bird argued that federal agents violated her constitutional rights eight times in 2005 through illegal searches, including the one in Rapid City. Most of them were done at her doublewide trailer house in Pine Ridge.

Colin Spotted Elk has joined Blue Bird in her motion to suppress evidence taken from a March 23, 2005, search of her house. Officers carrying out the search warrant exceeded its scope, his attorney argued in a court document.

Since the Rapid City hotel arrests, Blue Bird, Spotted Elk and 14 other people have been indicted on various charges, including conspiracy to distribute cocaine and marijuana, possession with intent to distribute cocaine, distribution of cocaine, and possession of firearms in relation to drug trafficking.

Prosecutors also want to seize Blue Bird's house if she's convicted.

KINI station manager Richard Iyotte is making changes

BY ARCHIE BEAUVAIS
Times Correspondent

Richard Iyotte, at KINI 96.1 FM radio station, said , "Where else can you listen to Shania Twain one minute and the next hear Earl Bull Head and that is the uniqueness that we have over others."

ST. FRANCIS - Richard Iyotte has been the station manager at KINI FM radio 96.1 since September of 2005 and his selection was a surprise as he was competing against other people who were also qualified for the position. He has worked closely with Fr. John Hatcher, the superior at St. Francis Mission, which operates the station under the auspices of the St. Francis Mission.

Iyotte said, "Fr. Hatcher is offering change and is more accessible and supportive and that is important. I like to be creative and am confident of my abilities." He says that he also made some important changes and innovations since arriving at the station. Much of his time when not on air, is to spent in programming, doing recorded promotions, and selling on-air advertisement time to local businesses.

Iyotte attended high school in Los Angeles, CA. Business/Acccounting degree from IVY Tech, Hotel Restaurant Mgt. Degree from Northwood Institute, Paralegal training at OLC and has had a variety of training and employment positions, which have prepared him for a job that requires one to be spontaneous and able to make programming decisions which will be informative to the Sicangu people.

He spent the last 25 years living and working in Porcupine as a bus driver, public defender, and a licensed truck driver. His work at the Oglala sister station, KILI FM 90.1 on top of the butte in Porcupine for 7-8 years as an on air deejay and in sales was good preparation for the work he is now engaged in. He said, "I know Buzz, Melanie and the others. It was a fun crew back then in the 1980's. KILI was open to a lot of creativity. I also did a number of live remotes."

He explained that as a long haul truck driver he hauled a variety of cargo from produce to military weapons for United Defense and went from coast to coast. Radio being the only entertainment.

Iyotte says that his work at KINI is governed by a Catholic influence by necessity, but that is fine with him. He is comfortable with that in his respect for religion as he also integrates traditional Lakota spirituality into his life through sundance, sweats and ceremony.

He said, "I like to do things where the youth is involved. Making young leaders is important." During the Planting Dreams career day at Todd County High School last Friday, Iyotte set up his live remote equipment and chatted with professionals, students and community members alike on air.

"Some of the ambitions they have are great for living on the reservation, as I can see them looking out further. As long as I am at KINI, I will make sure we participate. The way KINI is received by the youth is right to take advantage of. We should be a positive voice" he added.

Iyotte also has played in a rock band and written hundreds of songs, and toured Europe with his group. They played for many causes and benefit concerts. He admits to being proficient in playing the guitar, the flute, piano and the saxophone. His group has a website at www.arrowspace-rock.com.

A couple of goals that he would like to accomplish while at KINI is to create a 'streaming video' whereby listeners from all over the world can access the station on the worldwide web. He said, "KINI and KILI radio are two very famous stations as people all over the world access them. I tell my staff that we are just as important as other stations in the United States. Where else can you listen to Shania Twain one minute and the next hear Earl Bull Head and that is the uniqueness that we have over others."

The other goal Iyotte would like to work on is to be able to take a stand for sobriety and to be a positive influence.

He said, "I would like to see the kids participate in radio events, if they can get over their shyness and develop their communication skills."

On the personal side, Richard and his wife Marie, have a child of five years who was born premature at 23 weeks and is blind.

He has been receiving medical treatment in Detroit and the hope is that he will be able to see out of one of his eyes. He said, "My son suffered retinopathy and the doctors didn't acquaint us with the problem. He is the love of my life. The doctors don't give us the treatment we deserve. Frederick Lewis Iyotte III, is learning three languages and goes to sweats and also is learning to play piano."

Richard Iyotte has become a positive voice on the Rosebud as he has worked to highlight Lakota people who are high achievers, those working for wellness, and recently, fundraising for the youth who will be trekking to 'down under' for a variety of sporting events.

Richard Iyotte may be reached at 605-747-2291. View the KINI Radio website athttp://www.gwtc.net/~kinim.

ASK ANNA

Psychic ~ Clairvoyant

Dear Anna:

I have gotten myself in a mess. I like this one guy, and told him I wanted to get together with him, but I am still sort of seeing this other guy. The other guy is persistent and doesn't understand that I like him, but...

What do you see happening? Will I get together with the new guy (we used to go out before), what about the old guy?

Wants one but the other wants me.

Dear Wants:

Whoa! So many men... so little time. That is how I see your energy... forcing itself outward to "search" for the next candidate, since the current candidate isn't "him."

The advice (although you didn't really ask for advice) that I am offering for your consideration is to give both men a break, and concentrate on learning to feel complete as a woman. This call-in of your own spirit or energy will bring you into the grace of womanhood: A woman who has called to the Creator for her life-mate, a woman that feels good about her attitudes, understanding, compassion, beauty, and is in peace with the world about who she is and what that means to her. A woman that knows and understands her womanhood and her balance with a mate. A woman that does not deny her own power and learns not to misuse it.

What I see is that the one guy will date you...but he's not for keeps. He doesn't trust you and thinks of you as a "player." I see the "other guy" getting angrier and meaner and more controlling...until he loses his temper.

Then I see him, because of the consciousness of his job in the community, withdraw in sort of a haze of hatred.

This is because he feels the fool and cannot accept his own actions as verifying that, so he would rather caste the blame on you. This is an example of you misusing your power as a woman. You took him into your web without consideration of the true out-come. You knew when you went after him, in your heart, that he was not the "one."

There are too many imbalances between you: different spiritual understanding, different economic backgrounds, different cultural perspective, and different understanding as to what a woman's role in a relationship should be. He believes in subservience, and you do not. Therefore, accept the responsibility of allowing this relationship to dedicate itself to a noisy outcome and let him and the relationship go.

Do not engage in argument or denial. Just keep saying over and over: "It just isn't going to work. You and I are too different to share the same life-space."

I do see, however, a true love for you...in August. You have very little time girl, to lay your past jealousies and insecurities down, and find your power. Get working and praying on yourself and let the frivolous relationships go.

If you fail to create a more secure person from yourself, you will take that burden into the new relationship, and sooner or later it will erupt into very rough water. Blessings to you.

Dear Anna:

My mom and dad are fighting all the time. Sometimes I hate to come home after school because I know some body's gonna be yelling. They both break things.

They both scream and yell and holler all over the place. They both ask me to answer a question to make it seem like I am taking sides. They yell about money and then I feel bad when I spend some. I want to go and live with my grandma but I don't want to hurt any body's feelings. When will they stop yelling? Is my dad gonna leave? Sometimes I wish he would just so the yelling would stop.

Worried kid

Dear Worried:

Both of your parents love you. They will separate and live in different houses in a few months. It will work out better for you and for them. One time they thought that they could live together, but they are very different from each other and cannot come to a single mind.

Neither one is a bad person, they just don't see life in the same way. Your dad will still see you and as soon as he gets a different place to live he will have you over to his house a lot. Your grandmother will read this column and know what she should do.

She will tell your dad and mother that this is not good and they need to be more respectful to your right to have a good life. She will take you home with her quite a bit to allow you peaceful television and good meals without yelling. It will all work out. Sometimes parents forget that they create the energy of a home together, and that their own frustrations should not create an environment that is unfriendly. Good luck little Sacred one.

Dear Anna:

What do you see happening with the Bear Butte problem? I am worried because my grandmother says that this is unfair. What will happen?

I carried a sign

Dear Sign Carrier:

I am in shame for the lack of respect demonstrated by the people in the Sturgis area. What I see I wish to change; so I will ask that the people who want to organize an effort to change the outcome to please try these tactics: Ask to see an environmental impact study.

I am tired of hearing about property rights. If you own property next door to a school you cannot run a pornography business, a gentleman's club, a bar, or sell guns.

This is clearly environmental pollution. Property rights do not include the right to environmentally distress or pollute your neighbors' property. Take it to a higher court. For the white people, I wish to try to explain something - a concept that is apparently foreign to them: Bear Butte is holy.

Their is there a Great Spirit. It is affronting to soil the environment with disrespectful noise. It is a place of communion with Spirit, including Unci Maka (Mother Earth). Let me put a bar and concert hall for motorcycle enthusiasts next door to your church just two Sunday's a year, and worse, let me name it in a mockery of what you believe in. Let me call it "Blood of Christ Bar." In the United States, the violation of one person's freedom of religion is a threat to us all. We must respect each other.

Lakota people: gather your money. Hit them where it hurts. Advertise. Write letters to Harley Davidson stating that the home of their big Rally is in jeopardy of being perceived as prejudice and anti-Indian.

Get on the television. Buy ads in motorcycle magazines explaining to the bikers what is going on. Not all bikers are disrespectful of Native American rights. Many bikers will boycott this place. You big names out there - become a Voice. Now is the time. Perhaps these actions will change the outcome that I see. I pray for you and your land.

Dear Anna:

My girlfriend told my husband that I was having an affair with her husband, and now my husband won't believe me that I am not messing around. I love my husband and this makes me very sad. I did spend some time with him at my house because my friend and my husband were both working together. What is really going on?

Wants everything to be O.K.

Dear O.K.:

The shoes are on the other feet if you get my drift. They are seeing each other, and you guys are getting blamed. This is a mess and it ends messily.

I don't have any suggestions on how to influence your husband except to leave him and wait a while. He may come back to you after you leave and he has a chance to discover the true nature of your so-called "friend."

Good Luck

Corps releases money for new water intake

SIOUX FALLS (AP) - The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers will provide $2.8 million to connect a new water intake on Lake Oahe for a pipeline that serves the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation.

The new intake for the Mni Waste Water System will be put in much deeper water in Oahe. The current intake in shallow water leaves it vulnerable to siltation or being out of service if the water level drops low enough.

The Mni Waste Water System serves 14,000 people.

A water level below 1,562 feet above sea level will cause the intake to fail, officials say.

The lake stood at 1,576 feet Friday, but last month's forecast said it could flirt with 1,562 as early as August.

In the long term, officials say, the tribe might need a new, larger water treatment plant.
